Important distinction 1: admit vs confess

admit

broad: acknowledge something is true.

confess stronger; often implies wrongdoing, guilt, or something secret.

> admit a mistake

承認錯誤

> confess to a crime

承認犯罪

Kevin admits he jumped to conclusions. Confess would sound unnecessarily dramatic here.

Important distinction 2: admit vs acknowledge

admit

often implies something difficult, embarrassing, or against your interest.

acknowledge

more neutral: recognize or accept a fact.

> He acknowledged the problem.

他承認 / 確認問題存在。

> He admitted he caused the problem.

他承認是自己造成問題。

Admit often carries more personal responsibility.

Important distinction 3: admit vs accept

admit

say/recognize that something is true.

accept agree to receive something or come to terms with reality/responsibility.

> admit you were wrong

承認自己錯

> accept responsibility

承擔責任

You can admit something without fully accepting its consequences.

Important distinction 4: admit vs own up

admit

neutral standard verb.

own up

informal and often means finally confess wrongdoing.

> He admitted his mistake.

他承認錯誤。

> He finally owned up to the mistake.

他終於坦白認錯。

Important distinction 5: admit doing vs admit to doing

Both are standard:

> admit making a mistake

> admit to making a mistake

The to version often feels especially natural for wrongdoing or responsibility.

Do not use:

> admit to make a mistake ❌

After admit to, use noun or -ing.

Important distinction 6: admit that vs admit doing

admit that + clause

gives a complete proposition.

> admit that he was wrong

承認他錯了

admit + -ing

focuses on the action.

> admit making the mistake

承認犯錯

Important distinction 7: admit defeat vs give up

admit defeat

acknowledge you have lost or cannot succeed.

give up

stop trying.

You can give up without saying you were defeated, and you can admit defeat after already stopping.

Important distinction 8: admit someone vs let someone in admit someone more formal.

let someone in everyday.

> Visitors are admitted at 10.

訪客十時起准許進入。

> Let him in.

讓他進來。

Important distinction 9: admit to hospital vs visit hospital

be admitted to hospital

become an inpatient / formally received for treatment.

go to hospital

simply go there, possibly for examination or treatment.

Being admitted is a specific step.

Important distinction 10: admission = confession vs admission = entry

Confession

> an admission of guilt

認罪

Entry

> free admission

免費入場

Same noun, completely different sense.

Important distinction 11: admission vs ticket

admission

right to enter.

ticket

physical/digital proof giving that right.

> Admission is free.

免費入場。

> Show your ticket.

出示門票。

Important distinction 12: admission vs tuition

For universities:

admission

getting accepted into the institution.

tuition

teaching fees / educational instruction depending on context.

They are unrelated despite appearing in education contexts.

Important distinction 13: admissible does not mean admitted

admitted

actually accepted/allowed in.

admissible

eligible or allowable under rules.

> admissible evidence

依法可以使用的證據

> admitted student

已被取錄的學生

Different meanings.

Family-extension note

Admit has several major modern branches:

1. acknowledge truth or fault

- * admit that...
- * admit doing
- * admit a mistake
- * admit responsibility
- * admit defeat

2. allow entry

- * admit visitors
- * admission fee
- * gain admission

3. accept into an institution

- * admitted to university

4. accept into hospital

- * admitted to hospital
- * hospital admission

5. formal acceptability

- * admissible evidence
- * inadmissible evidence

The semantic connection is broad but useful:

allow something in / accept something

That can mean:

- * accept a fact into acknowledgment,
- * let a person into a place,
- * accept a student into a university,
- * accept a patient into hospital,
- * accept evidence into legal proceedings.

For your original sentence

> He admitted that he had jumped to conclusions and that stress had got the better of him.

Here:

admitted = 他不再為自己辯解，而是直接承認那些對自己不利、顯示自己做錯了的事是真的

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 他直接承認自己太快下判斷，也承認是壓力令他失去了分寸。

The key nuance is stronger than plain said:

> say = 說出某件事

> admit = 承認一件原本可能不想承認、而且通常對自己不利的事

That is why admit fits Kevin's apology especially well.
