Important distinction 1: angle vs perspective

These are very close in your passage.

angle

often means a particular way of approaching or examining something.

perspective

broader viewpoint shaped by position, experience, or beliefs.

> look at the issue from another angle

換個角度看問題

> understand her perspective

理解她的觀點 / 立場

In your passage, angle suggests alternative analytical approaches.

Important distinction 2: angle vs point of view

point of view

the opinion or position from which someone sees something.

can be more strategic or analytical:
= which aspect you choose to focus on.

So:

> historian's point of view

歷史學家的觀點

> a new angle on the event

分析事件的新角度

Important distinction 3: angle vs side

side

can mean one party or one side of an argument.

angle

means a particular way of analysing it.

> both sides of the dispute

爭議雙方

> several angles on the dispute

看待爭議的幾個角度

A dispute may have two sides but many angles.

Important distinction 4: angle vs aspect aspect

one feature or part of a topic.

angle

the viewpoint or approach used to examine it.

> the economic aspect of the issue

問題的經濟層面

> examine it from an economic angle

從經濟角度研究它

Very close, but conceptually different.

Important distinction 5: angle vs approach

approach

method of dealing with something.

angle

viewpoint or chosen line of analysis.

> a new approach to teaching

新的教學方法

> a new angle on history

理解歷史的新角度

Important distinction 6: angle vs direction

direction

where something points or moves.

angle

precise relationship between directions or lines.

> turn in another direction

轉向另一方向

> tilt it at a 30-degree angle

把它傾斜 30 度

Important distinction 7: angle vs corner

angle

geometric relationship formed by intersecting lines.

corner

physical place where surfaces/edges meet.

> a 90-degree angle

90 度角

> the corner of the room

房間角落

In everyday language they may correspond to similar Chinese words, but they are not the same concept.

Important distinction 8: at an angle vs on an angle

at an angle

standard expression:

= tilted/slanted.

> The picture hangs at an angle.

畫斜掛着。

On an angle occurs regionally/informally, but for learners at an angle is the safer standard form.

Important distinction 9: camera angle vs viewpoint

specific physical position/direction of the camera.

viewpoint

broader position from which something is seen or considered.

A camera angle is one physical type of viewpoint.

Important distinction 10: angle = point of view vs angle = hidden motive

Compare:

> Let's try a different angle.

讓我們換個角度。

versus:

> What's his angle?

他有甚麼盤算？

The second is more informal and suspicious—it asks about someone's strategy or ulterior purpose.

Important distinction 11: angle for vs ask for

ask for directly request.

angle for

try indirectly to get something.

> He asked for praise.

他直接要求稱讚。

> He was angling for praise.

他拐彎抹角地想得到稱讚。

This indirectness is central.

Important distinction 12: angle for vs aim for aim for openly target a result.

angle for

try indirectly, strategically, often subtly.

> aim for promotion

以升職為目標

> angle for promotion

暗中設法爭取升職

Important distinction 13: angling = fishing vs angling for something

Literal

> angling for trout

垂釣鱒魚

Figurative

> angling for praise

設法討稱讚

The figurative sense develops naturally from fishing:

trying to catch a fish

→ trying indirectly to obtain something

Important distinction 14: angular vs angled angled placed at an angle.

> an angled screen

angular

having many sharp angles.

> an angular building

稜角分明的建築

They are related but not interchangeable.

Important distinction 15: angle vs angel

Classic spelling trap.

角；角度；觀點

angel

天使

The letter order differs:

* angle

* angel

They are completely different words.

Family-extension note

Angle has a very clear conceptual core:

a particular direction or relationship between lines

From this literal spatial concept, English develops several strong figurative branches:

1. geometry

- * right angle
- * acute angle

2. physical orientation

- * at an angle
- * angle the screen

3. viewing / photography

- * camera angle
- * viewing angle

4. perspective / analysis

- * from a different angle
- * examine every angle

5. media framing

- * a new angle on a story
- * angle an article towards an audience

6. strategy / hidden purpose

- * What's his angle?

7. indirect pursuit

- * angle for a promotion

8. fishing

* angling

9. shape family

* angular

* angular features

The passage uses the important metaphorical development:

physical viewing direction → intellectual viewpoint

Master comparison

Form / expression	Traditional Chinese	Core idea
-----	-----	-----
angle (viewpoint)	角度；觀點	way of interpreting
from another angle	從另一角度	alternative perspective
from all angles	從各方面	comprehensive analysis
angle (geometry)	角；角度	intersecting lines
right angle	直角	90 degrees
acute angle	銳角	under 90 degrees
obtuse angle	鈍角	90–180 degrees
at an angle	傾斜着	slanted orientation
45-degree angle	45 度角	measured orientation
camera angle	鏡頭角度	filming viewpoint
viewing angle	觀看角度	viewing direction
story angle	報道 / 故事切入角度	chosen focus
someone's angle	盤算；用意	hidden strategy
angle something	調整角度	position diagonally
angle X towards Y	把 X 朝向 Y	directional positioning
angle a story towards X	針對 X 呈現	frame deliberately
angle for X	設法爭取 X	seek indirectly
angling	垂釣	fishing
angular	有稜角的	sharp-lined shape
angular features	稜角分明的五官	bony/sharp contours

For your original sentence

> He showed me that a good question could open a door, and that one event could be understood from different angles.

Here:

angles = 不同的觀點、立場或分析切入方式

The metaphor comes from physical vision:

- > look at an object from different physical angles
- > → understand an issue from different intellectual angles

So the sentence means that history is not merely a single fixed account. One event may be analysed through:

- * different people's experiences,
- * different causes,
- * different consequences,
- * different social or economic perspectives.

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

- > 他讓我明白，同一件事其實可以從不同角度去理解。

For this passage, 「角度」 is exactly right because it preserves both the natural Chinese expression and the English metaphor.
