Important family note:

Although attend / attention / attentive are historically and morphologically related, for modern learners they do not behave as one perfectly transparent family. Attend has several distinct lexical senses, while attention and attentive have their own productive meanings. Since attention is already in your database, I would keep the present curation centered on attend / attendance / attendant / attentive and avoid re-curating the whole attention family.

Important distinction 1: attend vs go to go to very general and everyday.

attend

more formal and specifically means being present at an institution, event, class, etc.

> I went to the meeting.

我去了那個會議。

> I attended the meeting.

我出席了那個會議。

In many contexts both work, but attend foregrounds participation/presence.

Important distinction 2: attend school vs go to school

Both can mean 「上學 / 就讀」.

attend school

more formal; emphasizes enrollment/regular presence.

go to school

more everyday and broad.

> She attends school in Kowloon.

她在九龍一間學校就讀。

> She goes to school every day.

她每天上學。

Important distinction 3: attend vs join

attend

be present at an event.

join become part of a group/activity, or take part with others.

> attend a meeting

出席會議

> join a club

加入社團

You can attend a club meeting without joining the club.

Important distinction 4: attend vs participate in

attend

only guarantees presence.

participate in means active involvement.

A person can attend a seminar but say nothing.

If they participate in the seminar, they actively contribute.

Important distinction 5: attend vs take part in

Very similar to the previous distinction.

attend

focuses on being there.

take part in focuses on active participation.

> 100 people attended the event, but only 20 took part in the competition.

一百人出席活動，但只有二十人參加比賽。

Important distinction 6: attend to vs attend

This is essential.

attend something

= 出席

> attend a meeting

出席會議

attend to something

= 處理 / 留意

> attend to a problem

處理問題

One small to changes the meaning substantially.

Important distinction 7: attend to someone vs care for someone

attend to someone often means give immediate practical attention.

care for someone broader, often longer-term physical/emotional care.

> The nurse attended to his wound.

護士處理他的傷口。

> She cared for her father for years.

她照顧父親多年。

Important distinction 8: attendance vs participation

attendance

presence.

participation

active involvement.

High attendance does not necessarily mean high participation.

Important distinction 9: attendance vs audience

attendance

number/presence of people at an event.

audience

the people watching or listening to a performance, speech, etc.

> attendance was 5,000

出席人數為五千

> the audience applauded

觀眾鼓掌

Important distinction 10: attendant noun vs attendant adjective

Noun

> a flight attendant

空中服務員

Adjective

> attendant risks

伴隨而來的風險

These are grammatically and semantically distinct.

Important distinction 11: attentive vs attending

attentive

= paying close attention

attending

= being present / participating / serving as the responsible professional in some contexts

> an attentive student

專心的學生

> students attending the lecture

出席講座的學生

Do not confuse them.

Important distinction 12: attentive vs polite

attentive

notices and responds to needs/details.

shows good manners.

Someone can be polite but not very attentive.

Family-extension note

The attend family has several major modern branches:

1. presence

- * attend school
- * attend a meeting
- * attendance

2. care / handling

- * attend to a patient
- * attend to a matter

3. attention

- * attend to instructions
- * attentive
- * attentively

4. service

- * attendant

5. accompanying consequences

- * attendant risks
- * attendant costs

The core conceptual thread is something like:

be present with / give attention to

But these branches are distinct enough to teach separately.

For your original sentence

> He taught at the government secondary school I attended from Form One to Form Six.

Here:

attended = 就讀；在那間學校上學

The speaker is not saying they merely visited or went to an event at the school.

It means they were a student there over a sustained period.

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 他在我由中一讀到中六所就讀的官立中學任教。

So the exact passage sense is:

attend a school = 以學生身份在該校就讀
