Important distinction 1: conclusion vs result result

what happens as an outcome.

conclusion

what you decide or infer from information.

> The result was a delay.

結果是延誤。

> My conclusion was that communication had failed.

我的結論是溝通出了問題。

A result may lead to a conclusion.

Important distinction 2: conclusion vs decision

conclusion

belief/judgment about what is true.

decision

choice about what to do.

> conclusion: Kevin had opened the wrong file.

> decision: Kevin should apologize.

Different mental acts.

Important distinction 3: conclusion vs assumption

assumption

something accepted as true without sufficient proof.

conclusion

normally something reached after reasoning.

However, in:

> jump to conclusions

the “conclusion” has been reached too quickly and may effectively rest on an assumption.

Important distinction 4: conclude vs infer infer derive information from evidence or clues.

arrive at a final judgment after considering evidence.

They often overlap, but conclude sounds more final.

Important distinction 5: conclude vs decide conclude that...

decide what you believe is true.

choose an action.

> I concluded that he was wrong.

我得出結論認為他錯了。

> I decided to speak to him.

我決定跟他談。

Important distinction 6: conclude vs end

end

general word for stop/finish.

conclude

more formal and often suggests an organized or definite ending.

> The meeting ended at six.

會議六時結束。

> The meeting concluded at six.

會議於六時正式結束。

Important distinction 7: conclude with vs conclude that conclude with X

以 X 結束

> The talk concluded with a question.

演講以一條問題作結。

conclude that X

得出結論認為 X

> We concluded that the plan was workable.

我們得出結論認為計劃可行。

Completely different structures.

Important distinction 8: conclude by doing vs conclude with conclude by + -ing

focuses on final action.

> conclude by thanking everyone

最後向大家致謝

conclude with + noun

focuses on final element.

> conclude with thanks

以致謝作結

Important distinction 9: conclusive vs convincing

convincing

persuasive; makes you likely to believe something.

conclusive

stronger: sufficient to settle the matter.

Evidence can be convincing without being fully conclusive.

Important distinction 10: conclusive vs definitive

They overlap strongly.

conclusive

emphasizes evidence that settles a question.

definitive emphasizes finality, authority, or being the most complete/decisive version.

> conclusive evidence

> 確鑿證據

> definitive guide

> 權威 / 最完整指南

Important distinction 11: conclusive vs decisive

decisive

causes or determines an outcome.

conclusive

settles uncertainty or proves something sufficiently.

> decisive goal

決定勝負的一球

> conclusive evidence

足以定論的證據

Important distinction 12: inconclusive vs negative

Very important.

negative result

may indicate something was not found.

inconclusive result

means no clear determination can be made.

So:

> inconclusive $\neq$ negative

It means:

不知道 / 證據不足，不能下結論

Important distinction 13: inconclusive vs uncertain

uncertain

broad lack of certainty.

inconclusive

specifically evidence/results fail to support a definite conclusion.

Important distinction 14: jump to conclusions vs reach a conclusion

reach a conclusion

normally neutral and deliberate.

jump to conclusions

premature and insufficiently evidenced.

This is the key contrast for your passage.

Important distinction 15: in conclusion vs to conclude

Both can introduce a final summary:

> In conclusion, communication matters.

> To conclude, communication matters.

In conclusion is especially common in formal writing and speeches.

Important distinction 16: conclusion of a story vs conclusion from evidence

Story/document:

ending

> the conclusion of the novel

> 小說結尾

Reasoning:

judgment

- > the conclusion drawn from the evidence
- > 從證據得出的結論

Same noun, different semantic branch.

Family-extension note

The conclude family has three major semantic branches:

1. reasoning / judgment

- * conclude that
- * conclusion
- * draw a conclusion
- * jump to conclusions

2. ending / completion

- * conclude a speech
- * meeting concludes
- * conclusion of the event
- * concluding remarks

3. certainty of evidence

- * conclusive evidence
- * conclusively prove
- * inconclusive result

There is also a formal transactional extension:

4. complete an agreement

- * conclude an agreement
- * conclude a deal

The semantic link is:

bring thought/process to an endpoint

That endpoint may be:

- * a judgment,
- * the end of an event,
- * a settled question,
- * a completed agreement.

Master comparison

Form / expression	Traditional Chinese	Core idea

conclusiveness	確鑿程度；決定性	degree of finality

For your original sentence

> He admitted that he had jumped to conclusions and that stress had got the better of him.

Here:

conclusions = 他根據不足的資料所作出的判斷

Kevin effectively moved too quickly from:

> “I can't find your slides.”

to:

> “You didn't upload them, and you're holding everyone back.”

without checking enough evidence.

So:

jump to conclusions = 還未查清楚就太快作出確定判斷

And the family contrast is especially useful:

> conclude = 得出結論

> conclusion = 結論

> conclusive = 足以定論的

> conclusively = 以足以定論的方式

> inconclusive = 證據不足、無法定論的

For this passage, Kevin's original evidence was clearly not conclusive—which is exactly why he should not have jumped to conclusions.
