Important distinction: deep vs high

For physical dimensions:

deep

= distance downward/inward from a surface.

high

= vertical distance upward.

> deep hole

= 洞很深

> high wall

= 牆很高

Different directions.

Important distinction: deep vs long

deep

= inward/downward extent.

long

= end-to-end length.

A swimming pool can be:

> 25 metres long and:

> 2 metres deep.

Important distinction: deep vs wide

deep

= surface to bottom/back.

wide

= side to side.

> deep cupboard

= 向內很深

> wide cupboard

= 橫向很寬

Important distinction: deep vs profound

These overlap in abstract meanings.

deep

= everyday and flexible.

profound

= more formal; strongly emphasizes intellectual/emotional significance.

> deep respect

very natural.

> profound respect

more formal/intense.

> deep hole

possible.

> profound hole

not normally possible.

So profound only overlaps with figurative deep.

Important distinction: deep vs serious*

deep problem

often implies:

> underlying/rooted problem.

serious problem

= severe/important problem.

A problem can be serious without having deep roots.

Important distinction: deep feeling vs strong feeling strong feeling

= high emotional intensity.

deep feeling

= strong and often enduring/profound emotion.

Deep adds a sense of emotional depth.

Important distinction: deeply vs very* very

is a general intensifier.

deeply

works especially well with:

- * emotions;
- * attitudes;
- * beliefs;
- * effects.

> deeply concerned

> deeply moved

> deeply respected

It suggests intensity plus depth/profundity.

Important distinction: deeply powerful vs very powerful

very powerful

= high degree of power.

deeply powerful

= powerful in a profound, emotionally meaningful, or far-reaching way.

Your passage uses deeply to emphasize quality of impact, not merely raw strength.

Important distinction: deeply vs highly

Compare:

> deeply respected

= respect felt strongly/profoundly.

> highly respected

= respected to a high degree.

Both are possible, but highly respected is more conventional for status/reputation, while deeply respected can sound more personal/emotional.

Important distinction: deeply vs widely

This is especially useful because your passage also contains widely respected.

widely respected

= respected by many people.

deeply respected

= respected very strongly/profoundly.

So:

widely = breadth

deeply = intensity/depth

Important distinction: deep sleep vs long sleep

deep sleep

= sleep is heavy/intense; difficult to wake.

long sleep

= sleep lasts a long time.

Different dimensions.

Important distinction: deep voice vs loud voice

deep voice

= low pitch.

loud voice

= high volume.

A voice can be deep but quiet.

Important distinction: deep colour vs dark colour

These overlap strongly.

deep colour

= rich/intense/saturated colour.

dark colour

= low lightness.

A deep red is usually darkish and rich, but deep emphasizes richness/intensity.

Important distinction: deep thought vs difficult thought

deep thought

= serious/profound thinking.

difficult thought is not a standard equivalent.

The difficulty of a topic and the depth of thinking are separate.

Important distinction: deep understanding vs broad knowledge

deep understanding

= detailed/profound understanding of a subject.

broad knowledge

= knowledge covering many different areas.

This is the classic contrast:

> depth vs breadth.

Important distinction: deep roots vs old roots

deep roots

= firmly established, fundamental, often long-standing.

old roots

would merely emphasize age and is less idiomatic.

Deep roots suggests strength and embeddedness.

Important distinction: deep in thought vs thinking

thinking

= engaging in thought.

deep in thought

= highly absorbed in serious thinking.

The latter is much more intense.

Important distinction: in depth vs deeply

in depth

usually describes the thoroughness of examination/discussion.

> discuss something in depth

deeply

usually describes degree/intensity.

> deeply concerned

So:

> “discuss deeply”

is usually less natural than:

> “discuss in depth.”

Important distinction: depth vs deepness

depth

is the normal noun:

> depth of the pool

> depth of feeling

deepness

exists but is much less common and usually unnecessary for learners.

Prefer:

> depth

Important distinction: deepen vs increase

increase

= become greater generally.

deepen

= become more intense, serious, profound, or physically deep.

> deepen understanding

more specific than:

> increase understanding.

Important distinction: deep-seated vs deep

deep fear

= very strong/profound fear.

deep-seated fear

= fear established for a long time and difficult to remove.

Deep-seated emphasizes rootedness/permanence.

For your original passage

> “Kindness can be quiet, steady, and deeply powerful.”

The exact meaning is:

deeply = to a very great and profound degree

Therefore:

> deeply powerful

= 「具有深刻、深遠而強大的力量」

The choice of deeply matters.

If the sentence simply said:

> very powerful

it would mean:

> power at a high degree.

But:

> deeply powerful

suggests something more:

> the power reaches inward

> affects people emotionally

- > lasts
- > changes how people feel or think.

That fits your grandmother perfectly.

Her kindness is not:

- > loud
- > flashy
- > dramatic

but its effect can still be:

- > deep

This creates a very nice metaphorical progression from literal depth:

- > something goes far below the surface to emotional depth:

- > something reaches far beneath superficial feelings.

The most important learner contrasts are:

- > deep water

> = 深水

- > deep into the forest

> = 深入森林

- > deep thought

> = 深思

- > deep respect

> = 深厚敬意

- > deeply moved

> = 深受感動

- > deeply concerned

> = 深感憂慮

- > deep impression

> = 深刻印象

> deep voice

> = 低沉聲音

> deep blue

> = 深藍色

> deep trouble

> = 大麻煩 / 嚴重困境

> deep understanding

> = 深入理解

> deep sleep

> = 熟睡

> deep breath

> = 深呼吸

> deep roots

> = 深厚根基 / 根深蒂固

> in depth

> = 深入地

> out of your depth

> = 超出能力範圍

> deepen understanding

> = 深化理解

So deep is much richer than simply:

> deep = 深的

and in your original passage its family form deeply specifically means:

“to a profound degree — kindness may appear quiet, but its emotional impact and influence can reach very deeply.”
