MCQ-ready definition:

for someone's enjoyment = 為了讓某人得到樂趣、欣賞或享受

Important distinction 1: enjoy vs like

These overlap, but not completely.

like

broad preference

> I like coffee.

我喜歡咖啡。

enjoy

emphasizes getting pleasure from an experience

> I enjoy drinking coffee in the morning.

我很享受早上喝咖啡。

So enjoy is often more experiential.

Important distinction 2: enjoy + -ing, not enjoy + to-infinitive

This is one of the most important grammar rules.

Correct:

> I enjoy reading.

我喜歡閱讀。

Not standard:

>  I enjoy to read.

So:

enjoy + noun

enjoy + -ing

not normally enjoy + to do.

Important distinction 3: enjoy doing vs like to do enjoy doing strongly focuses on pleasure.

> I enjoy cooking.

我享受煮食。

like to do

can mean preference or habit.

> I like to cook early so dinner is ready on time.

我喜歡早點煮飯，這樣晚餐可以準時準備好。

So like to may be about preference or routine, not necessarily enjoyment.

Important distinction 4: enjoy yourself vs enjoy

enjoy + object

> I enjoy the party.

我很享受這個派對。

enjoy yourself

> I enjoyed myself at the party.

我在派對上玩得很開心。

Do not say:

> ❌ I enjoyed at the party.

You need either:

> enjoy the party

or > enjoy yourself at the party

Important distinction 5: enjoy yourself vs have fun

These are very close.

> Enjoy yourself!

好好玩！

> Have fun!

玩得開心！

Have fun is generally more casual. Enjoy yourself can fit a wider range of pleasant occasions.

Important distinction 6: enjoy vs appreciate

enjoy

feel pleasure

> I enjoyed the concert.

我很享受音樂會。 appreciate recognize value, quality, or kindness

> I appreciated her help.

我很感激她的幫助。

You can appreciate something without necessarily enjoying it.

Important distinction 7: enjoy vs love

love usually stronger.

> I love travelling.

我非常喜歡旅行。

enjoy

positive pleasure, but often less emotionally intense.

> I enjoy travelling.

我享受旅行。

Important distinction 8: enjoy being around someone vs love someone

This matters for your passage.

> I enjoy being around Leo.

means:

I find his company pleasant.

It does not necessarily mean the same emotional depth as:

> I love Leo.

So enjoy being around focuses on the experience of spending time together.

Important distinction 9: enjoy good health is not ordinary pleasure

Compare:

Pleasure

> She enjoys swimming.

她享受游泳。

Possession/benefit

> She enjoys good health.

她享有良好健康。

The second is more formal and means:

have the benefit of not literally “feel pleasure from health.”

Important distinction 10: enjoy success vs achieve success

achieve success

focuses on reaching success through effort.

enjoy success

focuses on having/experiencing the successful state.

> The company achieved success after years of work.

公司經多年努力後取得成功。

> The company enjoyed success for many years.

公司多年來一直享有成功。

Important distinction 11: enjoyable vs pleasant

enjoyable

specifically means something provides enjoyment.

> an enjoyable film

令人看得開心的電影 pleasant

broader: nice, agreeable, comfortable.

> pleasant weather

宜人的天氣

Not everything pleasant is an activity you actively enjoy.

Important distinction 12: enjoyment vs pleasure

They overlap heavily.

enjoyment

often refers to pleasure gained from a particular activity or experience.

pleasure

broader and can describe feeling, politeness, satisfaction, etc.

> reading for enjoyment

為樂趣而閱讀

> It's a pleasure to meet you.

很高興認識你。

You would not normally replace the second with enjoyment.

Important distinction 13: enjoy + abstract nouns in formal English

This is a useful extension learners often miss.

English commonly uses enjoy with abstract benefits:

* enjoy freedom
* enjoy rights
* enjoy good health
* enjoy success
* enjoy popularity
* enjoy protection
* enjoy access to something

These all share:

possess and benefit from something favourable

This is a genuine extension beyond ordinary “have fun.”

Family-extension note

Enjoy has two major modern semantic branches:

1. experience pleasure

* enjoy music
* enjoy reading
* enjoy being around someone
* enjoy yourself

2. possess or benefit from something favourable

* enjoy good health
* enjoy success
* enjoy support
* enjoy legal protection

The second is more formal and abstract, but very common in written English.

The core learner point is also strongly grammatical:

enjoy + noun / enjoy + -ing not normally:

enjoy + to-infinitive

So enjoy is a good example where both polysemy and grammar-pattern control matter.

enjoy protection	享有保障	benefit from protection enjoyable	令人愉快的	gives enjoyment enjoyment	樂趣；享受	pleasure received for your enjoyment	供你欣賞 / 享用	intended to give pleasure

For your original sentence

> Another reason I enjoy being around him is that he reminds me not to take life too seriously.

Here:

enjoy being around him = 喜歡和他相處；享受待在他身邊的感覺

The speaker is saying that Leo's company itself is pleasant.

It is not merely:

> I like Leo.

It is more specifically:

> I feel good when I spend time around him.

A natural Traditional Chinese translation is:

> 我另一個喜歡和他相處的原因，是他會提醒我不要把人生看得太嚴肅。

So the passage uses the pleasure-from-an-experience sense of enjoy, specifically the pattern:

enjoy + -ing
