

Absolutely — every is a very useful grammar/polyfunctionality target because your passage uses it here:

> “...and every time I looked at it, I noticed something new.”

Here every means each individual occurrence in a complete series, so every time means 每一次 / 每逢.

Word family / grammar family: every / everyone / everybody / everything / everywhere

Base form: every Part of speech: determiner (限定詞)

Useful patterns: every + singular noun, every time, every day, every other, every few, every one of Unlike lexical words such as paint or collection, every is mainly a grammar/polyfunctionality word.

Meaning in your passage: every time + clause = 每一次 ; 每逢

Your sentence:

> “Every time I looked at it, I noticed something new.”

Here:

> every time = on each occasion without exception

繁體中文 :

每一次某件事發生時都如此 ; 每次、每逢

Natural translation:

> “Every time I looked at it, I noticed something new.”

「每一次我再看它 , 都會留意到一些新的東西。」

So here:

> every time = 每一次 / 每逢

1. every + singular countable noun — 每一個 ; 每位 ; 每

The core grammar pattern.

Practice 1

> “Every student received a copy.”

「每位學生都收到一份。」

Practice 2

> “Every plant needs some form of care.”

「每一棵植物都需要某種照料。」

every + singular countable noun = 把一個群體中的每個成員逐一包括在內，沒有例外

The noun after every is normally singular.

because a number greater than one requires a plural noun.

6. every other + singular noun = 每隔一個；每兩個一次

A high-value pattern.

Practice 12

> “She waters the plants every other day.”

「她每隔一天 / 每兩天一次替植物澆水。」

「每個人對藝術都有不同品味。」

17. everyday vs every day — 日常的 vs 每天

This is especially important because everyday is already in your database, but the contrast belongs here.

every day

two words:

= 每天

> “I look at the painting every day.”

「我每天都看這幅畫。」

everyday

one word:

= 日常的 ; 平常的

> “everyday life”

「日常生活」

So:

> every day = adverbial time phrase

> everyday = adjective

Excellent MCQ trap.

18. every now and then = 偶爾；間中

A common fixed expression.

Practice 34

> “I visit the museum every now and then.”

「我偶爾會去博物館。」

Practice 35

> “Every now and then, she changes the arrangement.”

Practice 36

> “I return to the painting every so often.”

「我每隔一段時間 / 偶爾會再看這幅畫。」

every so often = occasionally, at intervals

20. every which way (口語，尤其 AmE) — 四面八方；亂七八糟各個方向

A secondary idiom.

Practice 38

> “People were moving every which way.”

「人們向四面八方移動。」

Practice 39

> “The branches were growing every which way.”

「樹枝亂七八糟地向各個方向生長。」

every which way = in many/all different directions, often disorderly

Register: informal, especially AmE.

Important distinction: every vs all

You already curated all.

every + singular noun focuses on individual members:

> “Every student received a book.”

all + plural noun focuses on the group as a whole:

> “All students received books.”

Both may translate:

「所有學生」

but the grammatical perspective differs:

> every = 每一個

> all = 全部

Important distinction: every vs each

This is the biggest learner contrast.

every

sees all members of a group comprehensively.

each emphasizes members individually, one by one.

> “Every painting was beautiful.”

= 每一幅都漂亮，概括整組。

> “Each painting had a different frame.”

= 每幅畫各自有不同畫框。

Also:

each can be used for two items.

every normally suggests a group of three or more.

Important distinction: every vs everyone

every

must normally modify a noun:

> every person

everyone

stands alone:

> Everyone arrived.

Not:

> Every arrived. ❌

So:

> every = 限定詞
> everyone = 代名詞

Important distinction: everyone vs every one

This is highly testable.

everyone

one word:
= every person

> “Everyone enjoyed the exhibition.”

every one

two words:
= each individual one, people or things

> “Every one of the paintings was valuable.”

So:

> everyone = 每個人
> every one = 每一個

Important distinction: every vs any

every

= all individual members, without exception.

any

= whichever one / one or more, no particular member specified.

> “Every visitor received a guide.”

= 每位訪客都收到指南。

> “Any visitor can ask for help.”

= 任何訪客都可以求助。

Different logic.

Important distinction: every vs most

every = 100% of individual members.

most = majority, not necessarily all.

> every painting

> = 每一幅畫

> most paintings

> = 大部分畫作

Important distinction: every vs some

every

= each member, no exceptions.

= an unspecified portion.

> every visitor

> = 每位訪客

> some visitors

> = 一些訪客

Important distinction: every day vs each day

Very close.

every day

often describes regular repetition as a routine.

> “I walk every day.”

each day

can emphasize each individual day separately.

> “Each day brought something new.”

In many contexts they are interchangeable, but the emphasis differs slightly.

Important distinction: every time vs whenever

You already curated whenever.

every time

noun phrase + relative-like clause:

> “Every time I look at it...”

whenever conjunction:

> “Whenever I look at it...”

Both:

「每次我看它時.....」

Every time often feels slightly more explicit/emphatic about repeated occasions.

Important distinction: every other day vs every two days

These can be close, but there is a subtle framing difference.

every other day

= 隔一天一次

Pattern:

day 1, day 3, day 5...

every two days

normally = 每兩天一次

Often practically the same schedule, but every other day emphasizes alternating days.

Important distinction: every other = alternate vs remaining others

Same form, two meanings.

Alternating:

> “every other day”

= 每隔一天

All remaining:

> “better than every other painting”

= 比其他所有畫都好

Context decides.

Important distinction: every few days vs every several days

Natural English strongly prefers:

> every few days

for:

「每隔幾天」

every several days is much less natural in many varieties.

Important distinction: everyday vs daily

everyday

adjective:

= 日常的 / 平常的

daily

can be:

* adjective: 每日的

* adverb: 每天地

> everyday life

> = 日常生活

> daily routine

> = 每日例行活動

Related but not equivalent.

Grammar note: possessive reference after every

Traditional formal English sometimes uses:

> “Every student should bring his or her book.”

Modern natural English very commonly uses singular they:

> “Every student should bring their book.”

So although every student takes a singular verb, later pronouns can naturally be singular they/their.

Grammar / family sweep

After the full audit, the useful modern inventory is:

* every + singular noun = 每一個

* every + singular verb agreement = 每個.....都.....

* every time = 每一次 / 每逢
 * every + time period = 每.....
 * every + number + plural noun = 每隔.....
 * every other — alternating = 每隔一個
 * every other — all remaining = 其他所有
 * every few + plural noun = 每隔幾.....
 * every single = 每一個，無一例外
 * every possible = 每一個可能的
 * every one of =中的每一個
 * everyone = 每個人
 * everybody = 每個人 / 大家
 * everything = 一切 / 所有東西
 * everywhere = 到處
 * every day = 每天
 * everyday = 日常的
 * every now and then = 偶爾
 * every so often = 間中 / 偶爾
 * every which way = 四面八方 / 各個方向
