Important distinction 1: expect vs hope

Very important.

expect

believe something is likely to happen.

hope

want something desirable to happen.

> I expect it will rain.

我預計會下雨。

> I hope it won't rain.

我希望不要下雨。

You can expect something you do not want.

Important distinction 2: expect vs believe believe think something is true.

expect

think something will probably happen or be the case.

> I believe he's honest.

我相信他很誠實。

> I expect he'll arrive soon.

我預計他很快會到。

Important distinction 3: expect vs predict predict

make a forecast, often explicitly and sometimes based on analysis.

expect

ordinary belief about what is likely.

> Experts predict higher prices.

專家預測價格上升。

> I expect prices to rise.

我預期價格會上升。

Important distinction 4: expect vs anticipate anticipate

more formal and can mean:

* expect

* prepare for something in advance

expect

more common and neutral.

> We anticipate delays.

我們預料會有延誤。

> We expect delays.

我們預期會有延誤。

Important distinction 5: expect vs wait for

These are not the same.

expect someone

= believe they are coming.

wait for someone

= remain until they arrive.

> I'm expecting John.

我知道 John 會來。

> I'm waiting for John.

我正在等 John。

You can expect someone without actively waiting at that moment.

Important distinction 6: expect someone to vs want someone to expect someone to can mean:

* think they probably will

* require them to want someone to expresses desire.

> I expect him to arrive at six.

我預計他六點到。

> I want him to arrive at six.

我希望他六點到。

Different meaning.

Important distinction 7: be expected to = prediction vs obligation

This is a crucial grammar ambiguity.

Prediction

> The train is expected to arrive at six.

預計火車六點到。

Obligation / norm

> Students are expected to behave politely.

學生理應 / 被要求有禮貌。

Context determines the sense.

Important distinction 8: expect from vs expect of Both occur.

expect something from someone often focuses on what they provide/do.

> I expect better work from him.

我期望他有更好的工作表現。

expect something of someone often sounds slightly more formal and emphasizes standards.

> We expect a lot of our teachers.

我們對老師要求很高。

Important distinction 9: expectation vs hope

expectation

belief or standard.

hope

desire for a positive outcome.

> My expectation is that sales will rise.

我的預期是銷售會上升。

> My hope is that sales will rise.

我希望銷售會上升。

Important distinction 10: expected vs predictable expected

something was anticipated.

predictable

easy to predict, sometimes with a negative meaning of being unoriginal.

> The delay was expected.

延誤早已在預料之中。

> The ending was predictable.

結局太容易猜到。

Important distinction 11: unexpected vs surprising

unexpected

not anticipated.

surprising

causes surprise.

Usually connected, but not identical.

Something can be unexpected without being emotionally shocking.

Important distinction 12: as expected vs expectedly

Standard English strongly prefers:

> as expected

rather than:

> expectedly

Although expectedly exists, it is much less natural in everyday English.

So for learners:

Prefer as expected.

Important distinction 13: expecting = waiting vs pregnant

In a full verb construction

> We're expecting guests.

我們在等客人來。

Standalone/euphemistic

> She's expecting.

她懷孕了。

Context is essential.

Family-extension note

Expect has several major modern branches built around:

believing that something is likely or due to happen

The main branches are:

1. prediction

* expect rain

* expect to finish

* expect that...

2. belief about another person's action

* expect someone to do something

3. requirement / standard

* students are expected to...

* expect a lot from someone

4. awaiting arrival

* expect guests

5. pregnancy

* expect a baby

* be expecting

6. noun family

* expectation

* meet expectations

* exceed expectations

7. opposite

* unexpected

* unexpectedly

The passage uses the straightforward prediction/assumption sense.

Master comparison

Form / expression	Traditional Chinese	Core idea
-----	-----	-----
expect something	預料某事	believe likely

unexpectedly	出乎意料地	in unanticipated way

For your original sentence

> Once he started teaching, he became much more lively than people expected.

Here:

expected = 原先預料；原本以為會是某種情況

The sentence creates a contrast:

> first impression → serious > actual teaching manner → much livelier than expected

So a natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 他一開始教書，就比大家原先預期中生動活潑得多。

The exact passage sense is the straightforward prediction/assumption meaning of expect.
