MCQ-ready definition:

gift-giver = 把禮物送給別人的人

Important distinction 1: gift vs present

These are very close.

gift

slightly broader and can also mean:

- * talent
- * figurative blessing
- * formal donation

present

usually means an actual object given to someone.

> birthday gift / birthday present

Both are natural.

But:

> a gift for music

> a present for music

So gift has a much richer semantic range.

Important distinction 2: gift vs donation

gift

can be personal or formal.

donation

usually given to:

* charity

* organization

* cause

> a birthday gift

生日禮物

> a charitable donation

慈善捐款

A formal donation may legally be described as a gift, but everyday usage differs.

Important distinction 3: gift vs reward

gift

given voluntarily, often from affection or generosity.

reward

given because someone achieved or did something.

> a birthday gift

生日禮物

> a reward for good work

工作表現良好的獎勵

So a gift does not require earning it.

Important distinction 4: gift vs prize

gift

given personally or voluntarily.

prize

won through competition or achievement.

> a gift from my mother

媽媽送的禮物

> first prize

一等獎

Important distinction 5: gift vs souvenir

gift

something given to another person.

souvenir

something kept/bought to remember a place or event.

A souvenir can become a gift if you give it to someone.

Important distinction 6: gift = present vs gift = talent

Object

> She gave me a gift.

她送我一份禮物。

Ability

> She has a gift for music.

她有音樂天賦。

These are genuinely distinct major senses.

Important distinction 7: gifted vs talented gifted often suggests exceptionally high natural ability.

talented

has strong skill/ability.

> a gifted child

資優兒童

> a talented singer

有才華的歌手

There is substantial overlap, but gifted can be stronger and more formal in education.

Important distinction 8: gifted student does not mean “student who received a gift”

This is a classic learner trap.

> a gifted student

= 資優 / 很有天賦的學生

not:

> a student who was gifted something

The adjective is lexicalized.

Important distinction 9: gift as verb vs give give very broad and ordinary.

gift

more marked:

- * formal donation

- * promotional giving

- * deliberate present-giving

> I gave her a book.

very natural everyday English.

> I gifted her a book.

possible, but sounds more deliberate, promotional, or modern-styled.

For normal everyday learner English, give is usually safer.

Important distinction 10: gift to vs gift someone something

Both are possible:

> gift the painting to the museum

> gift the museum the painting

The first often sounds more formal and is especially natural in donation contexts.

Important distinction 11: free gift

Logically, a gift is already free to the recipient, so free gift may sound redundant.

But it is a very common marketing expression meaning:

an extra item provided at no additional charge

So it is lexicalized enough to teach.

Important distinction 12: gift card vs gift voucher

Very close.

gift card

usually physical/digital card with stored value.

gift voucher

coupon/document redeemable for goods/services, especially BrE.

Both can function as presents.

Important distinction 13: gift receipt vs ordinary receipt

ordinary receipt shows purchase and usually price.

gift receipt

allows exchange/return while typically hiding price.

Useful practical distinction.

Important distinction 14: gift = blessing vs literal gift

Literal

> She gave me a gift.

她送我一份禮物。

Figurative

> Good health is a gift.

健康是一份恩賜。

The figurative use extends the idea of something valuable that one receives without necessarily earning it.

Important distinction 15: gift for X vs gift of X

gift for X

usually talent in an activity:

> a gift for teaching

教學天賦

gift of X

can mean:

* talent/ability

* precious thing metaphorically bestowed

> the gift of speech

> 說話能力

> the gift of time

> 珍貴的時間

Context decides.

Family-extension note

Gift has three major modern semantic branches:

1. present / something given

- * birthday gift
- * gift card
- * gift shop
- * gift receipt

2. natural talent

- * a gift for music
- * gifted child

3. figurative blessing / valuable thing received

- * health is a gift
- * the gift of time

The verb gift develops directly from the first branch:

- * gift something to someone
- * corporate gifting

For learners, the biggest distinction is:

gift = 禮物

vs

gift = 天賦

and then:

gifted = 有天賦的 / 資優的

For your original sentence

> A gift that really stands out in my memory was a handmade photo album I gave to my mother for her birthday about two years ago.

Here:

gift = 禮物；為表達心意或慶祝而送給別人的東西

The rest of the passage develops an important contrast:

- * expensive gift  not necessarily meaningful
- * practical gift  not necessarily personal
- * handmade photo album  emotionally meaningful and memorable

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 我記憶中最深刻的一份禮物，就是我大約兩年前在媽媽生日時送給她的一本手工相簿。

For this passage, the exact sense is the straightforward present / something voluntarily given to another person meaning of gift.
