Important distinction 1: jump vs leap

jump

everyday general word.

leap

often suggests a larger, stronger, or more dramatic jump.

> jump over a puddle

> 跳過水凼

> leap across a gap

> 躍過缺口

Both also have figurative uses.

Important distinction 2: jump vs hop

jump

usually uses both feet or broadly any leap.

hop

often a small jump, especially on one foot.

Important distinction 3: jump vs skip

jump

one upward/forward movement.

skip

can mean:

* move with a light step-and-hop motion,

* omit something.

> skip a section

跳過一節

Interestingly, jump ahead can also mean skipping ahead, but skip focuses more directly on omission.

Important distinction 4: jump to conclusions vs reach a conclusion

This is crucial for your passage.

reach / come to a conclusion neutral:

you arrive at a judgment after considering information.

jump to a conclusion

negative:

you decide too quickly.

> We reached the conclusion after reviewing the evidence.

查看證據後，我們得出結論。

> He jumped to the conclusion that I was responsible.

他未查清楚便認定是我的責任。

Important distinction 5: jump to conclusions vs assume assume believe something without proof.

jump to conclusions

emphasizes speed and insufficient investigation.

Kevin did both, but jumped to conclusions captures the impulsiveness particularly well.

Important distinction 6: jump to conclusions vs judge judge

form an opinion/evaluation.

jump to conclusions

judge prematurely.

So the phrase carries built-in criticism of the reasoning process.

Important distinction 7: jump at the chance vs take a chance

Very different.

jump at the chance

eagerly accept an opportunity.

take a chance

take a risk.

> I'd jump at the chance to travel.

我一定會立即把握旅行機會。

> I'll take a chance and apply.

我冒險試着申請。

Important distinction 8: jump the gun vs jump to conclusions

Both involve acting too early, but:

jump the gun

take action too soon.

jump to conclusions

form an opinion too soon.

> announce before confirmation → jump the gun > decide someone is guilty before checking → jump to conclusions

Important distinction 9: jump in vs interrupt

jump in

can be neutral/positive: join quickly.

interrupt

specifically break into someone else's speech/action.

> Feel free to jump in.

歡迎隨時加入。

does not necessarily mean rude interruption.

Important distinction 10: jump on someone vs jump at someone jump at someone physically leap toward them.

jump on someone can literally leap onto them, but figuratively can mean strongly criticize immediately.

Context matters.

Important distinction 11: jump out at someone

This does not usually mean physically jump toward someone.

> The mistake jumped out at me.

means:

那個錯誤非常顯眼，我一下便注意到了。

Important distinction 12: jump = rise suddenly vs increase increase neutral rise.

jump

rapid, noticeable rise.

> Sales increased by 2%.

銷售增加 2%。

> Sales jumped by 30%.

銷售急升 30%。

The verb jump adds suddenness and scale.

Important distinction 13: jump ship

Figuratively, it often implies leaving when:

- * problems appear,
- * better opportunities arise,
- * confidence falls.

It can sound mildly critical depending on context.

Important distinction 14: jump on the bandwagon

This often implies someone joins a trend because it is already popular, not because they independently believed in it from the start.

Important distinction 15: jumpy vs nervous nervous

anxious generally.

jumpy

nervous in a way that makes you startle easily.

> nervous before a presentation

> 簡報前緊張

> jumpy after hearing strange noises

> 聽到奇怪聲音後容易受驚

Important distinction 16: jumper has major BrE/AmE differences

BrE

jumper = 冷衫 / 套頭毛衣

AmE

jumper = 無袖連身裙

Both

can also mean someone/animal that jumps.

This is a classic dialect trap.

Family-extension note

Jump has several strong modern branches:

1. physical leap

* jump over

* jump into

* high jump

2. startle reaction

* make someone jump

* jumpy

3. rapid movement or transition

* jump ahead

* jump from topic to topic

* jump in

4. premature judgment/action

* jump to conclusions

* jump the gun

5. eager acceptance

* jump at the chance

6. sudden numerical increase

* prices jump

* a jump in sales

7. idiomatic social/action meanings

* jump the queue

* jump ship

* jump on the bandwagon

* jump through hoops

* jump down someone's throat

8. salience

* jump out at someone

9. family extensions

* jumper

* jumpy

* jump-start

For your passage, the exact branch is:

jump to conclusions = move mentally too quickly from limited evidence to a definite judgment

For your original sentence

> He admitted that he had jumped to conclusions and that stress had got the better of him.

Here:

jumped to conclusions = 還未充分查看證據，就太快認定「我沒有準時上傳，所以我拖慢大家」

Kevin saw what appeared to be missing work and moved too quickly from:

> "I can't see the file."

to:

> "You didn't upload it, and you're holding everyone back."

without properly checking whether that conclusion was true.

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 他直接承認自己太快下判斷 / 未查清楚就妄下結論。

For MCQ purposes, the cleanest exact meaning is:

jump to conclusions = 在證據不足或未了解全部情況前，過早作出確定判斷.
