Important distinction: long vs tall

A fundamental learner contrast.

long describes length from one end to the other.

tall

describes vertical height, especially people/buildings.

Compare:

> “a long table”

= 長桌

> “a tall building”

= 高樓

For people:

>  a tall person not normally:

>  a long person

Important distinction: long vs high

long

= length or duration.

high

= vertical position/level.

> long bridge

= 橋很長 > high bridge

= 橋距地面 / 水面很高

Different dimensions.

Important distinction: long vs far

long

usually describes the distance itself or route.

describes how distant something is.

Compare:

= 旅程很長。

> “The station is far away.”

= 車站很遠。

You can also say:

Important distinction: long vs lengthy

long is neutral.

often suggests:

> notably long, sometimes inconveniently or unnecessarily long.

> long meeting neutral.

> lengthy meeting often sounds like it took quite a while.

Important distinction: long vs prolonged

long

= simply lasting much time.

prolonged

= continuing longer than normal/expected, often formally.

> a long discussion

> a prolonged dispute

Prolonged often implies continuation over an extended period.

Important distinction: long vs lasting

long

describes duration itself.

lasting

means:

> continuing for a long time / remaining effective.

> “a long effect”

unnatural in many contexts.

> “a lasting effect”

= 持久影響

So long-lasting effect is especially natural.

Important distinction: long-term vs long-lasting

long-term

= considered over a long time horizon.

long-lasting

= actually continues for a long time.

Compare:

> long-term strategy

= 長期策略

> long-lasting effect

= 持久影響

Not interchangeable everywhere.

Important distinction: long-term vs long-standing

long-term

often looks forward or describes duration category:

> long-term plan

long-standing

means:

> already existing for a long time.

> long-standing problem

= 已存在多年的問題

So:

long-term = 長期性

long-standing = 由來已久

Important distinction: long-standing vs long-lasting

long-standing

= has existed for a long time up to now.

long-lasting

= remains for a long duration.

> long-standing tradition

= 由來已久的傳統 > long-lasting battery

= 很耐用、使用時間長的電池

Important distinction: long-lived vs long-lasting long-lived

is common for:

- * organisms;
- * organizations;
- * phenomena with a “life.”

long-lasting

is broader:

- * effects;
- * materials;
- * relationships;
- * products.

Both indicate extended duration.

Important distinction: no longer vs never

no longer

= was true before, but is not true now.

never

= at no time.

Compare:

> “I no longer avoid presentations.”

= 以前會逃避，現在不會。

> “I never avoid presentations.”

= 從來都不逃避。

Completely different timeline.

Important distinction: no longer vs not yet

no longer

= previously true → now false.

not yet

= currently false → expected/possible later true.

Compare:

> “I’m no longer nervous.”

= 現在不再緊張。

> “I’m not confident yet.”

= 現在還沒有自信，但可能將來會有。

They point in opposite temporal directions.

Important distinction: no longer vs still

These often contrast directly.

still

= situation continues.

no longer

= situation has stopped.

Your passage beautifully contains both:

> “I still feel nervous...”

but:

> “I no longer see them as a brick wall.”

So:

still = 狀態仍然持續

no longer = 以前狀態已停止

This distinction is central to your passage.

Important distinction: no longer vs anymore

Formal/neutral:

> “I no longer work there.”

Conversational:

> “I don’t work there anymore.”

Both mean:

「我已經不在那裡工作。」

No longer often sounds slightly more formal/written.

Important distinction: long ago vs before long

These are easy to confuse.

long ago

= 很久以前

> “It happened long ago.”

before long

= 不久之後

> “Before long, I felt calmer.”

Almost opposite meanings.

Important distinction: long before vs before long

Again:

long before X

= 很久以前，在 X 之前很久

before long

= 沒過多久

Word order changes meaning dramatically.

Important distinction: as long as — time vs condition

Time:

> “Stay as long as you want.”

= 想留多久就留多久。

Condition:

> “You can stay as long as you are quiet.”

= 只要你保持安靜就可以留下。

Context determines the meaning.

Important distinction: how long vs how far how long

asks:

* duration;

* physical length.

how far

asks:

* distance between places/points.

Compare:

> “How long is the meeting?”

= 多久？

> “How far is the station?”

= 多遠？

Important distinction: how long vs how much time

They often overlap for duration.

How long did it take natural and concise.

How much time did it take?

also possible, but more explicitly focuses on amount of time.

Important distinction: come a long way vs have a long way to go

These form a very useful contrast.

come a long way

= 已取得很大進步

have a long way to go

= 還有很多進步空間 / 工作要做

A learner can truthfully say both:

> “I’ve come a long way, but I still have a long way to go.”

「我已經進步很多，但仍然有很多要學。」

Important distinction: go a long way vs go a long distance

Literal:

> “We went a long distance.”

= 我們走了很遠。

Figurative:

> “A little practice goes a long way.”

= 一點練習也能產生很大效果。

Same spatial metaphor, different meaning.

Important distinction: long = desire vs want want

= general desire.

long for / long to = strong, sustained, often emotional desire.

Compare:

> “I want a break.”

ordinary.

> “I long for peace.”

more emotional/intense.

Long as a verb is often literary/emotive.

Important distinction: long for vs look forward to long for = strongly desire something, often because it is absent/difficult to obtain.

look forward to = feel positively excited about something expected in the future.

> “I long for confidence.”

= 渴望擁有自信。

> “I look forward to the presentation.”

= 期待那次簡報。

Different emotional structure.

Important distinction: longing vs wish wish can be a specific desire.

longing

usually suggests:

- * depth;
- * persistence;
- * emotional ache.

> “a longing for home”

= 深切思鄉 stronger than a casual wish.

Important distinction: length vs long

long

= adjective/adverb.

> “The presentation is long.”

length

= noun.

> “The length of the presentation is 20 minutes.”

So:

long = 長的

length = 長度 / 時長

Important distinction: lengthen vs extend lengthen

= make physically/temporally longer.

extend

is broader and can mean:

- * make longer;
- * expand range;
- * offer/provide;
- * prolong deadline.

> “lengthen the cable”

> “extend the deadline”

Collocations differ.

Important distinction: lengthy vs long-winded

lengthy

= taking a long time / having large length.

long-winded

= unnecessarily verbose.

A detailed report may be lengthy without being long-winded.

Important distinction: in the long run vs eventually eventually

= at some later/final time.

in the long run

= considering consequences over a long period.

> “Eventually, I finished.”

= 最後完成。

> “In the long run, the experience helped me.”

= 長遠來看，這經歷對我有幫助。

Important distinction: long shot literal vs figurative

Sports/photography:

> a long shot

= 遠射 / 遠景鏡頭

Figurative:

> a long shot

= 成功機會很低的事情

Context determines meaning.

Important distinction: long finance vs ordinary long

Ordinary:

> “a long meeting”

= 時間長的會議

Finance:

> “a long position”

= 預期價格上升而持有的多頭 / 好倉部位

These are separate specialist senses.

For your original passage

> “I still feel nervous before presentations now, but I no longer see them as a brick wall.”

The exact meaning is:

no longer = 不再；以前如此，但現在已經不是

Therefore:

> I no longer see them as a brick wall

= 「我已不再把簡報看成一堵無法突破的磚牆」

The especially important contrast is actually inside the same sentence:

> I still feel nervous

means:

the nervousness continues

but:

> I no longer see them as a brick wall

means:

the old belief has ended

So:

> still

> = 以前如此 → 現在仍如此 while:

> no longer

> = 以前如此 → 現在已不是

That contrast captures the development in the entire passage:

> nervousness did not completely disappear

> but your interpretation of presentations changed.

The most important learner contrasts are:

> no longer afraid

> = 不再害怕 > not afraid anymore

> = 已經不再害怕 > long hair

> = 長髮

> a long road

> = 很長的路

> a long distance

> = 長距離

> a long meeting

> = 很長時間的會議

> How long?

> = 多久 / 多長 ?

> long ago

> = 很久以前

> before long

> = 不久後 > long before the event

> = 活動前很久

> come a long way

> = 已經進步很多

> have a long way to go

> = 還有很多要學 / 改善

> go a long way

> = 起很大作用 > as long as you keep trying > = 只要你繼續嘗試 > long-term improvement

> = 長期改善 > long-standing fear

> = 長期存在的恐懼 > long-lasting effect

> = 持久影響

> long-awaited opportunity

> = 期待已久的機會

> in the long run

> = 長遠來說 > long for confidence

> = 渴望自信

> length

> = 長度 / 時長

> lengthen

> = 延長 > lengthy discussion

> = 漫長 / 冗長討論

So long is far richer than simply:

> long = 長的

and in your original sentence it specifically appears in:

no longer = not anymore — a situation that was true before has now ended.
