Your sentence:

> "I know that one day these visits will become memories, and I want to learn from her while I can."

Meaning in this passage

Here, memories means experiences from the present that will later be remembered as events from the past.

The speaker knows that one day these visits with the grandmother will no longer be present-day experiences. They will instead become things the speaker looks back on and remembers.

繁體中文： 對過去親身經歷的人、事情或時刻所保留下來的記憶 / 回憶

中文翻譯：

> "One day these visits will become memories."

「我知道有一天，這些探訪都會變成回憶。」

Practice 55

> “A memorial garden was created in her honour.”

「當地建了一座紀念花園來紀念她。」

memorial + noun = 為紀念已故人物或過往事件而設立 / 舉辦的

Important distinction: memory = 回憶 vs memory = 記憶力

This is the most important distinction.

a memory / memories

= specific things you remember.

> “I have happy memories of my grandmother.”

= 我對外婆有很多美好回憶。

memory — ability

= your ability to remember.

> “She has a good memory.”

= 她的記憶力很好。

So:

memories = remembered experiences

while:

memory = ability to remember

in this second use.

Important distinction: memory vs remembrance

memory

is the ordinary broad word for:

- * ability to remember
- * remembered experiences
- * stored information

remembrance

is more formal and often emphasizes:

> deliberately remembering or commemorating someone/something.

For example:

> “in remembrance of...”

sounds more ceremonial than ordinary memory.

Important distinction: memory vs recollection

memory

is broad and everyday.

recollection

often means:

> the act or content of consciously recalling a particular event.

> “To the best of my recollection...”

= 「據我記憶所及……」

Recollection is generally more formal.

Important distinction: memory vs reminder

memory

= something retained from the past.

reminder

= something that causes you to remember.

> “The photo is a reminder of our trip.”

= 照片提醒我那次旅行。

> “The trip is a happy memory.”

= 那次旅行是一段美好回憶。

Important distinction: memory vs experience

experience

= the event while you live through it.

memory

= what remains mentally after the event is over.

This distinction is central to your sentence:

> visits now → memories later

The same events move from present experience to remembered past.

Important distinction: remember vs memory

remember

verb:

> “I remember her house.”

= 我記得她的家。

memory

noun:

> “I have a clear memory of her house.”

= 我對她的家有很清楚的記憶。

Important distinction: memorize vs remember memorize

= deliberately learn something so that it stays in memory.

remember

= successfully retain or recall it.

> “I memorized her phone number.”

= 我刻意把她的電話號碼記熟。

> “I still remember her phone number.”

= 我現在仍記得她的電話號碼。

You can memorize something in order to remember it later.

Important distinction: memorable vs remembered

memorable

= likely/worthy to be remembered because it is striking.

remembered

= actually recalled or kept in people's memory.

Something can be:

> memorable

but eventually forgotten.

So the words are related but not identical.

Important distinction: memorable vs unforgettable

memorable

= distinctly worth remembering / leaves a strong impression.

unforgettable

= so striking that it seems impossible to forget.

Unforgettable is usually stronger.

Important distinction: from memory vs by memory

The standard expression is:

> from memory

> "She drew it from memory."

For ordinary learner English:

> by memory

is not the normal choice.

Important distinction: in memory vs in memory of

in memory

can refer to information being stored mentally or digitally:

> “The information remained in memory.”

in memory of someone is a fixed commemorative expression:

> “The garden was created in memory of her.”

= 花園是為了紀念她而設。

Important distinction: bring back memories vs remember

remember

= actively or spontaneously recall something.

bring back memories

= some outside stimulus causes old memories to return.

> music

> smell > photograph

> place

can all bring back memories.

Important distinction: memory — human vs computer

Human:

> “She has a good memory.”

= 她記性很好。

Computer:

> “The computer needs more memory.”

= 電腦需要更多記憶體。

The computing sense metaphorically borrows the concept of:

> storing information for later use.

But it is now a fully established technical meaning.

Important distinction: computer memory vs storage

In everyday technology language these are sometimes loosely mixed, but technically:

memory

often refers especially to working memory such as RAM.

storage

refers to longer-term data storage such as SSDs or hard drives.

So:

> 16 GB memory

usually does not mean:

> 16 GB disk storage.

Important distinction: memory vs memories — countability

memory — faculty usually uncountable:

> “Memory declines with age.”

a memory / memories — recollection

countable:

> “I have a memory of that day.”

> “I have many memories of childhood.”

This countability difference is very important.

Important distinction: collective memory vs personal memory

personal memory

= what one individual remembers.

collective memory

= how a group or society remembers and interprets its shared past.

Collective memory is therefore not literally one giant mind; it is a social extension of the concept.

Important distinction: memorial vs memory

memory

= the remembering itself or remembered content.

memorial

= something created or held to preserve/express remembrance.

For example:

> memory of the victims

> = 對遇難者的記憶

> memorial to the victims

> = 紀念遇難者的紀念物

Family-extension note

The memory family has several important but clearly distinguishable branches:

- * memory — recollection = 回憶
- * memory — ability = 記憶力
- * memory — mentally stored information = 記憶內容
- * collective memory = 集體記憶
- * in memory of = 為紀念.....
- * computer memory = 電腦記憶體
- * memorable = 難忘的 / 令人印象深刻的
- * memorably = 令人難忘地
- * memorize / memorise = 記熟 / 背熟
- * memorization / memorisation = 背記過程
- * memorial = 紀念物 ; 紀念性的

This is a good example of why the manual's mandatory word-family sweep matters: the bare noun has several genuine senses, while memorable, memorize, and memorial are useful family extensions that should be labelled as such rather than presented as additional meanings of bare memory.

For your original sentence

> “I know that one day these visits will become memories, and I want to learn from her while I can.”

The exact meaning is:

memories = 日後回想起來的過往經歷、片段和時刻

Therefore:

> these visits will become memories

= “「現在仍然可以親身經歷的探訪，有一天會變成只能回想的過往片段」”

The contrast is especially important:

> visits now = 現在正在發生、仍可親身經歷的相處 > memories later = 日後只能在腦海中回想的過去

So memory here is not:

* 記憶力 — “She has a good memory.”

* 電腦記憶體 — “The computer needs more memory.”

* 紀念 — “in memory of someone”

It is the countable recollection / remembered-experience sense:

> a memory → memories = 一段回憶 → 多段回憶.
