

Word family: new / newer / newest / newly / newness / newcomer

Base word: new

Comparative: newer

Superlative: newest

Related forms: newly, newness, newcomer

Part of speech: adjective (形容詞) / adverb-related form (相關副詞) / noun-related forms (相關名詞)

Your sentence:

> "...makes other people see the world with new eyes."

Meaning in this passage

Here, new does not mean that the person's physical eyes are newly created.

See something with new eyes means to look at or understand something from a fresh, different perspective, especially after gaining a new experience, insight, or way of thinking.

繁體中文： 以不同於以往、較新鮮或重新形成的角度去觀察和理解事物

中文翻譯：

> "...makes other people see the world with new eyes."

「.....能讓別人用新的眼光 / 全新的角度看世界。」

Here:

new eyes = 不同於以往的觀察角度或理解方式；新的眼光

1. new = recently created/produced/introduced (事物 / 制度 / 產品) — 新的；新推出的

This is the basic meaning.

Meaning: Created, produced, introduced, or begun only recently and therefore not existing in that form for very long.

Practice 1

> "The company launched a new product."

「公司推出了一款新產品。」

Practice 2

> “They introduced a new system last month.”

「他們上個月引入了一套新系統。」

new = 最近才被創造、製造、推出、建立或開始存在的

Common:

- * new product
- * new building
- * new law
- * new system
- * new technology
- * new programme

These share the same recently created or introduced concept.

2. new = recently acquired/appointed/arrived (人物 / 擁有關係) — 新來的；新任的；新買的

Something can be new to a particular person or organization even if it is not newly manufactured.

Practice 3

> “I bought a new car last week.”

「我上星期買了一部新車。」

Practice 4

> “Have you met the new manager?”

「你見過那位新任經理嗎？」

new = 最近才與某人、組織或情況建立關係，成為其新擁有、加入、任職或使用的對象

This creates an important distinction.

A:

> new car

can mean:

- * a newly manufactured car;
- * or simply a car that is new to its owner.

The context decides.

3. *new = unused / not previously owned or used (商品) — 全新的 ; 未使用過的***

Here, new specifically contrasts with:

> used / second-hand

Practice 5

> “The phone is completely new and still in its box.”

「這部電話是完全*全新的*，仍然放在盒裡。」

Practice 6

> “Do you want to buy a new car or a used one?”

「你想買*全新車*還是二手車？」 *new = 從未被使用、穿著或擁有過，以原來全新狀態出售或提供的***

This deserves separation from Meaning 2.

Compare:

> “This is my new car.”

The car may actually be second-hand; it is simply newly acquired by me.

But:

> “This car is new, not used.”

= the car itself has not previously been used.

Different concept.

4. new to + person/subject/activity (經驗 / 知識) — 陌生的 ; 剛接觸的

New can mean something is not previously known, experienced, or familiar to someone.

Practice 7

> “This idea is completely new to me.”

「這個概念對我來說完全陌生 / 是我第一次接觸的。」

Practice 8

> “She is new to teaching.”

「她剛開始接觸教學 / 教學經驗尚淺。」 be new to someone = 某人之前沒有接觸、知道或經歷過某件事情

be new to an activity/field = 剛開始參與某個活動或領域，經驗尚少

This is genuinely different from an object itself being newly created.

Something may be centuries old but still:

> new to me

because I have only just discovered it.

5. new = different/fresh compared with before (觀點 / 方法 / 生活) — 新的 ; 不同以往的 ; 重新形成的

This is the meaning used in your passage.

Meaning: Different from what existed, was believed, or was done before, often suggesting a fresh perspective, approach, beginning, or way of experiencing something.

Practice 9 — Original

> “He makes other people see the world with new eyes.”

「他能讓別人用新的眼光 / 全新的角度看世界。」

Practice 10

> “The experience gave her a new perspective on life.”

「這次經歷令她對人生有了*新的看法 / 不同以往的角度*。」

Practice 11

> “We need a new approach to the problem.”

「我們需要用一種*新的 / 不同以往的方法*處理這個問題。」 new = 與以往不同，帶來新的角度、方法、態度、狀態或可能性

Common:

- * new perspective
- * new approach
- * new way of thinking
- * new beginning
- * new direction
- * see something with new eyes

These share the concept:

> different from before / freshly formed rather than literally newly manufactured.

6. new = recently discovered/learned (資訊 / 證據 / 知識) — 新發現的 ; 新獲得的

Information can be new because it has only recently become known.

Practice 12

> “Police found new evidence in the case.”

「警方在案件中發現了*新的證據*。」

Practice 13

> “The research provides new information about the disease.”

「這項研究提供了有關這種疾病的新資料 / 新發現。」

new information/evidence = 最近才被發現、取得或知道，而之前並未掌握的資料

For core counting, I would normally merge this with Meaning 1 or 4, depending on perspective:

* information recently produced/discovered → #1

* information previously unknown to someone → #4

There is no need to manufacture a separate core sense purely because the noun is information or evidence. This follows the Golden Manual's merging principle.

Related form: newly

Newly means recently, especially after a change in status, creation, or condition.

Practice 14

> “They moved into a newly built apartment.”

「他們搬進了一個*新建成的*單位。」

Practice 15

> “She is the newly appointed director.”

「她是*新任命的*主管。」 newly = 某種狀態、身分、行動或創造在最近才開始 / 完成

Common:

* newly built

* newly married

* newly appointed

* newly discovered

* newly created

Related form: newness

Newness means the quality or state of being new.

Practice 16

> “The newness of the experience made it exciting.”

「這次經歷的*新鮮感*令它令人興奮。」

Practice 17

> “After a few weeks, the newness began to wear off.”

「幾星期後，那種*新鮮感*開始消退。」

*newness = 因某件事情剛出現、剛接觸或與以往不同而產生的新鮮狀態或感覺***

Related form: newcomer

A newcomer is someone who has only recently arrived, joined, or started participating.

Practice 18

> “She is a newcomer to the industry.”

「她是這個行業的*新人 / 新加入者*。」

Practice 19

> “The club welcomes newcomers.”

「這個會所歡迎*新來的人 / 新加入者*。」

*newcomer = 最近才來到某個地方、加入某個群體或開始參與某個領域的人***

This is a useful lexical family extension rather than another meaning of new itself.

Fixed expression: *brand-new — 全新的；嶄新的***

Practice 20

> “She bought a brand-new laptop.”

「她買了一部*全新 / 嶄新的*手提電腦。」

Practice 21

> “The school has a brand-new sports centre.”

「學校有一座全新的體育中心。」

brand-new = 完全新的，尤其強調從未使用或剛剛製成 / 推出

This intensifies the ordinary newness sense.

Fixed expression: as good as new — 恢復得像新的一樣

Practice 22

> “After the repair, the bike was as good as new.”

「修理後，那輛單車恢復得跟新的一樣好。」

Practice 23

> “Wash the cover and it will look as good as new.”

「把外套洗乾淨後，它看起來就會煥然一新。」

as good as new = 雖然不是新的，但經修理、清潔或恢復後狀態幾乎像全新一樣

This is a useful fixed expression, not another lexical meaning.

Fixed expression: a new lease of life — 重獲活力 / 新生

Especially in British English:

Practice 24

> “The renovation gave the old building a new lease of life.”

「翻新工程令這座舊建築重獲新生 / 重新有活力。」

Practice 25

> “The new role gave him a new lease of life.”

「新的角色令他重新充滿活力。」

a new lease of life = 某人或某物重新獲得活力、用途或發展機會

This belongs naturally to the broader fresh/different beginning idea.

Important distinction: new vs young

new

focuses on how recently something came into existence, use, possession, or a situation.

young

focuses on age or an early stage of biological/developmental life.

> “a new company”

= 最近成立的公司

> “a young person”

= 年紀較輕的人

A company can be new, but usually not literally young in the same way as a person.

Important distinction: new vs fresh

These overlap but differ.

new

= recently created, acquired, introduced, or different from before fresh

can mean:

- * recently made/prepared;
- * not stale;
- * renewed;
- * different and original.

> “a new idea”

= 新的想法

> “a fresh idea” often emphasizes:

= 新鮮、有創意、帶來不同角度的想法

In your passage, “new eyes” is close to the figurative idea of a “fresh perspective”.

Important distinction: “new vs modern”

“new”

focuses on recency.

“modern”

focuses on belonging to current or recent styles, technology, or periods.

An old building can have:

> a modern design

while no longer being:

> new

So:

“new = 新近的”

“modern = 現代的 / 符合當代方式的”

Important distinction: “new vs different”

“new”

often implies something has replaced, developed from, or appeared after an earlier state.

different only means not the same.

> “I need a new approach.”

often implies replacing the old approach.

> “I need a different approach.”

simply emphasizes that the approach should not be the same.

They overlap strongly, but new carries a time/change dimension.

Important distinction: new vs unused

A particularly important distinction:

> “I bought a new phone.”

can sometimes mean:

new to me

even if it was previously owned, depending on context.

But:

> “The phone is unused.”

specifically means:

no one has used it

Therefore:

newly acquired ≠ necessarily unused

This is why the “new to owner” and “brand-new/unused” interpretations deserve separation.

Family-extension note

The practical modern family includes:

* new
* newer
* newest
* newly
* newness
* newcomer

Useful compounds and expressions include:

* brand-new
* new to something
* new perspective
* new beginning
* new eyes
* as good as new
* a new lease of life

I would not automatically expand into news. Although historically related, news is a separate modern lexical item with its own grammatical and semantic behaviour and should be curated independently if needed.

The Golden Manual says common related forms should be included when they add learning value, but distant lexical relatives should be excluded rather than forced into the family.

Master comparison

Form / sense	MCQ-ready Traditional Chinese meaning
-----	-----
new — recently created/introduced	最近才被創造、製造、推出、建立或開始存在的
new — recently acquired/appointed/arrived	最近才與某人或組織建立關係，例如新買、新加入、新上任或新搬來的
new — unused	從未被使用、穿着或擁有過，仍處於原本全新狀態的
new to someone/activity	某人之前沒有接觸、知道或經歷過，或剛開始參與而經驗尚少的
new — fresh/different from before	與以往不同，形成新的觀點、方法、方向、狀態或可能性
newly	某種身分、狀態、行動或創造在最近才開始或完成
newness	某件事因剛出現、剛接觸或與以往不同而具有的新鮮狀態 / 感覺

| newcomer

| 最近才來到某地方、加入某群體或開始參與某領域的人

|

For your original sentence

> "...makes other people see the world with new eyes."

The exact meaning is:

new = 與原本的方式不同、重新形成而帶來新鮮觀點的

More specifically:

see something with new eyes = 用不同於過往的角度重新觀察和理解某件事情

So:

> see the world with new eyes

= 用新的眼光 / 全新的角度重新看世界

For your database, I would count 5 genuinely useful core meanings for new:

1. recently created, produced, introduced, or begun
2. recently acquired, appointed, joined, or associated with someone
3. unused / not previously owned or used
4. previously unfamiliar or inexperienced — new to someone/something
5. fresh/different from before — new perspective, new approach, new eyes

I would merge new information / new evidence / newly discovered things into #1 or #4 depending on context, rather than create an artificial sixth meaning.