Important distinction 1: order = sequence vs order = organization

Sequence

> the order of speakers

發言次序

Organization

> keep the room in order

保持房間整齊有序

Related, but not identical.

Important distinction 2: order vs arrangement

order

focuses on sequence or organized state.

arrangement

broader: how things are organized, planned, or positioned.

> speaking order

發言次序

> seating arrangement

座位安排

Important distinction 3: order vs sequence

sequence

specifically a series in a particular succession.

order

broader and can mean sequence, organization, command, purchase, etc.

For your sentence, order of speakers and sequence of speakers are close, but order is much more natural.

Important distinction 4: order vs rank

order

who comes first, second, third.

rank position according to performance/status.

> speaking order

發言次序

> class rank

班內排名

Important distinction 5: order noun vs order verb

Noun

> an order from the manager

經理的命令

Verb

> The manager ordered us to leave.

經理命令我們離開。

Important distinction 6: order = command vs request

order

authoritative and compulsory.

request

asks rather than commands.

> He ordered me to leave.

他命令我離開。

> He asked me to leave.

他要求 / 請我離開。

The first is much stronger.

Important distinction 7: order = command vs order = purchase

Command

> follow an order

服從命令

Purchase

> place an order

下訂單

Same noun, radically different meaning.

Important distinction 8: order food vs buy food

order food

request food from a restaurant/service.

buy food purchase food generally.

You can buy groceries without “ordering” them.

Important distinction 9: take an order vs give an order

Very important.

take an order

record what a customer wants.

give an order

issue a command.

> The waiter took my order.

侍應替我落單。

> The officer gave an order.

軍官下令。

Important distinction 10: in order vs in order to in order

有秩序 / 順序正確

> Everything is in order.

一切安排妥當。 in order to 為了

> I left early in order to prepare.

我提早離開以便準備。

Completely different functions.

Important distinction 11: out of order has multiple senses

Machine

> The lift is out of order.

升降機故障。

Sequence

> The pages are out of order.

頁次亂了。

Behaviour

> His comment was out of order.

他的說話不恰當。

This fixed phrase is highly polysemous.

Important distinction 12: order vs control

order

organized state.

control

power to direct/manage what happens.

> restore order

恢復秩序 > regain control

重新掌控局面

They often occur together, but are not synonyms.

Important distinction 13: order vs rule

order

specific command.

rule

general instruction applying repeatedly.

> an order to leave

離開的命令

> a rule against phones

禁止使用手機的規則

Important distinction 14: made to order vs off-the-shelf

made to order

收到訂單後按要求製作。 off-the-shelf

現成可買。

These are useful opposites.

Important distinction 15: standing order vs direct debit

In banking:

standing order

customer normally instructs bank to pay a fixed amount regularly.

direct debit

customer authorizes an organization to collect payments, which may vary.

They are not identical.

Important distinction 16: disorder = mess vs disorder = medical condition

General

> room in disorder

房間混亂

Medical

> sleep disorder

睡眠障礙

A major family polysemy split.

Important distinction 17: order in taxonomy

The biological hierarchy commonly includes:

> class → order → family → genus → species

So order here is a scientific classification level, not a sequence or command.

Family-extension note

Order is a particularly rich polysemy family with several major branches:

1. sequence

- * order of speakers
- * chronological order

2. organized state

- * keep order
- * restore order
- * in order

3. command

- * give an order
- * order someone to do something

4. purchase/request

- * place an order
- * order food
- * order online

5. formal/legal instruction

- * court order
- * restraining order

6. system/social structure

- * social order

7. scientific classification

- * biological order

* order of magnitude

8. institutional/religious group

* religious order

9. purpose construction

* in order to

10. family extensions

* orderly

* disorder

* disorderly

For your passage, the exact branch is:

order = sequence / planned speaking order

For your original sentence

> I was editing the final slides, checking the order of speakers, and trying to make sure that everything was under control.

Here:

order of speakers = 每位組員上台 / 發言的先後次序

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 我當時正在修改最後的投影片、確認每個人的發言次序，並且努力確保一切都在掌握之中。

The exact sense is straightforward sequence, but order as a whole is a very strong polysemy word because it moves across 次序 → 秩序 → 命令 → 訂單 → 法律命令 → 分類級別.
