Your passage contains:

> “Some people pass through your life like background noise...”

Here, pass through means:

to move through someone’s life temporarily without remaining a lasting presence.

Meaning in this passage

In:

> pass through your life

the meaning is figurative.

The people:

* enter your life;

* are present for some time;

* then move on;

* leave little lasting effect.

So pass through here means:

to be temporarily present in a person’s life and then leave.

繁體中文：  短暫經過某人的的人生；出現一段時間後離開

Important distinction: pass vs go go

= general movement from one place to another.

pass

often emphasizes:

> moving past/through a point.

> “We went through the city.”

= 我們穿過城市。

> “We passed through the city.”

= 我們經過城市，沒有停留太久。

Pass often suggests movement onward.

Important distinction: pass through vs stay

This is especially important for your passage.

pass through

= be present temporarily and continue onward.

stay

= remain.

Your metaphor contrasts people who:

> pass through your life

with people whose influence:

> stays / leaves an echo.

Important distinction: pass by vs pass through pass by

= go alongside/past something.

pass through

= enter and move within/across something.

> pass by a town

may mean go beside it.

> pass through a town

means go into/across it.

Important distinction: pass vs overtake

pass

= everyday general verb, especially AmE, for moving ahead of someone.

overtake

= more specific/formal, especially BrE for vehicles.

> pass another car

common AmE.

> overtake another car

common BrE.

Important distinction: pass something vs pass something on pass something

= hand it to someone nearby.

> "Pass me the book."

pass something on

= transfer it onward to another person, often information/knowledge.

> "Pass the message on."

The second emphasizes continued transmission.

Important distinction: pass on X vs pass X on

This is crucial.

pass on the offer

= decline the offer.

pass the offer on

= forward the offer to another person.

Word order changes the meaning completely.

Important distinction: pass vs succeed

pass

= meet the required standard in a test/exam.

succeed

= achieve a desired outcome more broadly.

You can:

> pass an exam

but:

> succeed in a career.

Important distinction: pass vs get a high mark

pass

only means:

> reach at least the minimum standard.

It does not mean:

> do extremely well.

Someone may pass with 51%.

Important distinction: pass vs approve

pass a law

= a legislative body formally approves it.

approve

= broader verb for giving official agreement.

A manager approves a request.

A parliament passes a bill/law.

Important distinction: pass time vs waste time

pass the time

= occupy yourself while time goes by; neutral.

waste time

= use time unproductively; negative.

Playing a game to pass time is not necessarily wasting time.

Important distinction: time passed vs time was spent time passed

= focuses on time moving forward.

time was spent

= focuses on how someone used the time.

Important distinction: pass away vs die

die

= direct neutral factual verb.

pass away

= gentler/euphemistic.

Use depends on tone and context.

Important distinction: pass = decline vs reject

pass

= informal, often polite/light refusal.

> "I'll pass."

reject

= explicitly refuse/not accept, often stronger/formal.

Important distinction: pass up vs miss

pass up an opportunity

= opportunity was available, but you chose not to take it.

miss an opportunity

= you failed to take it, perhaps accidentally.

Choice vs lost chance.

Important distinction: pass over vs pass by

pass by

= physically go past.

pass over

= skip, overlook, fail to select.

Very different.

Important distinction: pass down vs inherit pass down

= older generation transfers something to younger generation.

inherit

= younger person receives it, especially property after death.

Different perspective.

Important distinction: pass disease vs catch disease

pass a disease to someone = transmit it.

catch a disease

= become infected.

Sender vs receiver.

Important distinction: pass vs throw

In sport:

pass

= intentionally send the ball to a teammate.

throw

= describe the physical throwing action.

A throw is not necessarily a pass.

Important distinction: pass = ticket vs ticket

pass

often gives:

- * repeated access;
- * entry permission;
- * use over a period.

ticket

often gives:

- * one journey;
- * one event;
- * one admission.

Not always, but a useful tendency.

Important distinction: pass mark vs grade

pass mark

= minimum score needed to pass.

= actual result/category received.

Important distinction: pass judgment vs judge

judge

= form/evaluate an opinion.

pass judgment

= more formal and often emphasizes delivering a judgment.

Your previous passage used:

> judge someone too quickly.

Here:

> pass judgment

would sound more formal.

Important distinction: passing thought vs lasting thought passing

= brief and temporary.

lasting

= remains for a long time.

This contrast closely matches your passage:

> some people are merely passing presences, while Mrs. Chan has a lasting influence.

Important distinction: passage = text vs passage = route

Compare:

> “Read the passage.”

= 閱讀這段文章。 versus:

> “Walk through the passage.”

= 穿過通道。

Completely different meanings.

Important distinction: passage vs paragraph paragraph

= formally separated block of written text.

passage

= any selected continuous section of text, potentially several paragraphs.

So a reading passage may contain multiple paragraphs.

Important distinction: passage of time vs passing time

passage of time

= 時間的流逝.

passing time

can mean:

* time going by;

* spending time while waiting.

Different grammatical structures.

Family-extension sweep

The practical pass family is extremely rich:

For your original passage

> “Some people pass through your life like background noise, while others leave an echo...”

The exact meaning is:

pass through = be temporarily present and then continue onward

Therefore:

> pass through your life

= 「短暫出現在你的人生中，然後離開」

The metaphor comes from literal movement:

> a traveller passes through a town

> → enters

> → stays briefly

> → moves on.

The passage applies that spatial idea to human relationships:

- > a person enters your life
- > → is present temporarily
- > → then disappears without leaving much lasting effect.

That contrasts with Mrs. Chan:

- > she did not merely pass through your life
- > → she left an echo
- > → her influence remained long after the classes ended.

So the key contrast is:

- > passing presence
- > = 短暫出現、沒有留下太深影響

versus:

- > lasting influence
- > = 長期留下的影響.

The most important learner contrasts are:

- > pass through a town
- > = 經過一個小鎮

- > pass through someone's life
- > = 短暫經過某人的人生

- > pass by the building
- > = 從大樓旁經過

- > pass another car
- > = 超過另一輛車

- > pass me the book
- > = 把書遞給我

- > pass on a message
- > = 轉告訊息

- > pass an exam
- > = 考試及格

> pass a law

> = 通過法律

> pass the time

> = 打發時間 > time passes

> = 時間流逝

> the feeling passed

> = 感覺消退了

> pass away

> = 去世

> I'll pass.

> = 我不用了 / 我不參加

> pass on the offer

> = 婉拒提議

> pass the offer on

> = 把提議轉給別人

> pass up an opportunity

> = 放棄 / 錯過機會

> pass down a tradition

> = 傳承傳統 > pass the ball

> = 傳球 > boarding pass

> = 登機證 > mountain pass

> = 山口

> pass judgment

> = 下判斷 > in passing

> = 順帶地

> a passing thought

> = 一閃而過的念頭

> reading passage

> = 閱讀短文 / 文章段落

> passage of time

> = 時間流逝

So pass is far richer than simply:

> pass = 經過

The key semantic map is:

PASS — movement

→ go through

→ go by

→ go beyond

PASS — transfer

→ hand over

→ forward information

→ transmit traditions/disease/ball

PASS — achieve approval/standard

→ pass an exam

→ pass a law

PASS — time/state

→ time passes

→ a feeling passes

PASS — refusal

→ “I’ll pass”

→ pass up an opportunity

PASS — noun

→ permit/ticket

→ sports pass

→ mountain pass

And in your original passage:

pass through = “to enter someone’s life only temporarily and then move on without leaving the lasting influence that Mrs. Chan did.”
