Important distinction: physical vs mental

This is the central contrast in your passage.

physical

= relating to the body.

mental

= relating to thought, cognition, or the mind.

Compare:

> “physical tiredness”

= 身體疲倦

> “mental tiredness”

= 精神 / 腦力疲倦

Your grandmother can therefore be:

> physically frail

while remaining:

> mentally strong.

Important distinction: physical vs emotional

physical

= bodily.

emotional

= relating to feelings and emotions.

> physical pain

= 身體疼痛 > emotional pain

= 情感上的痛苦

The word pain can occur in both domains, but the type differs.

---

Important distinction: physical vs psychological

physical symptom

= bodily symptom.

psychological symptom

= symptom primarily involving mental/emotional processes.

This distinction is common in health contexts.

Important distinction: physical vs spiritual

This is especially relevant to your passage's strong spirit.

physical

= bodily/material.

**spiritual**

= relating to the spirit, inner life, or religious/spiritual matters.

Your sentence creates a strong contrast:

> physically frail

but:

> strong in spirit.

Important distinction: **physical vs material**

These overlap in the “tangible” sense.

**physical**

often contrasts with:

- * digital;
- * virtual;
- * mental;
- * abstract.

**material**

focuses more specifically on matter/substance or practical possessions/resources.

> physical copy

very natural.

> material copy

usually not the same thing.

So collocation matters.

Important distinction: **physical vs tangible**

**physical**

= actually existing materially.

**tangible****

= able to be touched, or figuratively concrete/measurable.

> physical object

= 實體物件

> tangible benefit

= 可明確感受到 / 衡量的好處

**Tangible** has a stronger figurative “concrete result” use.

---

**physical store****

= 實體店 rather than online store.

**actual store****

= 真正那一家店 rather than some mistaken/imagined one.

So **physical** marks form of existence; **actual** marks reality/correct identity.

---

Important distinction: **physical vs real****

A virtual object can be:

> real in the sense that it genuinely exists digitally,

---

Important distinction: **physical appearance vs appearance**

**appearance**

- * outward look;
- * act of appearing.

**physical appearance**

specifically means:

> bodily/outward looks.

This prevents ambiguity.

---

Important distinction: **physical copy vs hard copy**

These are very close.

**physical copy**

= any tangible version.

**hard copy**

especially means:

> a printed paper version of digital information.

So:

> a printed report can be both.

But a physical copy could theoretically be another tangible medium.

Important distinction: physical store vs brick-and-mortar store

Both contrast with online retail.

physical store

= neutral, very clear.

brick-and-mortar store/business

= established idiomatic business term emphasizing a real premises.

Both:

> 實體店

Important distinction: physical world vs real world

physical world

focuses on:

> matter, bodies, objects and actual space.

real world

focuses on:

> actual everyday reality rather than theory, imagination or simulation.

They overlap, but the contrast is different.

---

Important distinction: physical property vs property

property

can mean:

- * characteristic;
- * owned land/building.

physical property

in science means:

> observable/measurable material characteristic such as density, colour, melting point, etc.

So this is a domain-specific compound.

Important distinction: physically possible vs possible

possible

= can happen/do in general.

physically possible

= bodily, spatial, or natural physical constraints permit it.

Something may be:

> physically possible

but:

> financially impossible.

Different constraint.

---

Important distinction: a physical vs physical

Adjective:

> “physical health”

= 身體健康

Noun:

> “I need a physical.”

= 我要做體檢。

The noun use is especially common in American English and must not be confused with the adjective.

---

Important distinction: **physical vs physics**

These are related-looking but **not interchangeable**.

**physical**

= adjective meaning bodily/material/etc.

**physics**

= the scientific discipline studying matter, energy, motion, forces, etc.

> physical science

≠ simply > physics

Although physics is one physical science.

---

Important distinction: **physical vs physiological**

A useful advanced contrast.

**physical**

= broad: relating to the body.

**physiological**

= specifically relating to how living-body systems and organs function biologically.

> physical weakness

= 身體虛弱

> physiological response

= 生理反應

Physiological is more technical.

---

For your original passage

> “Although she is quite small and **physically frail**, she has an incredibly strong spirit.”

The exact meaning is:

**physical = relating to the body and bodily condition** and:

**physically frail = 身體 / 體質上比較虛弱****

The sentence deliberately contrasts two dimensions:

> **physical condition****

> → frail

but:

> **inner character / spirit****

> → strong

So **physically** is important because without it:

> “She is frail.”

could sound like a broader statement about her overall weakness.

But:

> **physically frail****

limits the weakness specifically to:

**her body and physical condition.****

Her character is actually described as the opposite:

> **incredibly strong spirit****

The key passage mapping is therefore:

**physically = 從身體 / 體能方面而言****

**physically frail = 身體較虛弱、體質較弱****

The most important learner contrasts are:

> **physical strength****

> = 體力

> **physical health****

> = 身體健康

> **physical activity****

> = 身體活動

> **physical contact****

> = 肢體接觸

> **physical appearance****

> = 外貌

> **physical object****

> = 實體物件

> **physical copy****

> = 紙本 / 實體版本

> **physical store****

> = 實體店

> **physical evidence****

> = 實物證據

> **physical presence****

> = 親身在場

> **physical property****

> = 物理性質

> **a physical**

> = 體檢

> **physical education**

> = 體育

> **physical therapy**

> = 物理治療

So **physical** is much richer than simply:

> **physical = 身體的**

and in your original sentence it specifically means:

***“relating to her bodily condition and strength, in contrast with her strong inner spirit.”**
