Important distinction 1: publicly vs in public

They overlap, but their focus differs.

publicly

adverb describing how an action is performed:

> He apologised publicly.

他公開道歉。

in public

prepositional phrase emphasizing location/social setting:

> He apologised in public.

他在大家面前道歉。

For your passage, both could work, but publicly emphasizes that Kevin made the accusation openly rather than privately.

Important distinction 2: publicly vs openly

publicly

in front of the public or other people.

openly without hiding feelings, beliefs, or intentions.

> She publicly criticised him.

她公開批評他。

> She openly disliked him.

她毫不掩飾地表示不喜歡他。

Something can be openly expressed without reaching a large public audience.

Important distinction 3: publicly vs privately

Natural opposites.

公開地 / 當眾地

privately

私下地

> He criticised me publicly but apologised privately.

他當眾批評我，但私下向我道歉。

This contrast is especially relevant to your passage.

Important distinction 4: public vs private public

open to or involving the wider community.

private restricted to particular people or personal matters.

> public meeting

> 公開會議

> private meeting

> 私人會面

Important distinction 5: public = 公開的 vs public = 公共的

These are distinct Chinese mappings.

Open/non-private > public statement

> 公開聲明

Community/government-related

> public transport

> 公共交通

Learners should not mechanically translate every public as 「公共」.

Important distinction 6: public vs the public adjective

> public opinion

公眾意見

noun

> the public

公眾

Public as a noun usually takes the when referring to society generally.

Important distinction 7: publicly available vs free

publicly available

the public can access it.

free

no payment required.

Something can be publicly available but still require payment.

Important distinction 8: publicly known vs famous publicly known

information is not secret.

famous

a person/thing is widely recognized.

> The salary is publicly known.

薪酬資料已公開。

This does not mean the salary is “famous.”

Important distinction 9: publicly traded vs public company

In common business usage, a publicly traded company has shares traded on a public stock market.

Public company can vary slightly by legal system, so the more precise learner phrase for the stock-market sense is:

publicly traded company = 上市公司

Important distinction 10: go public has two major senses

Information

> go public with the story

> 把事情公開

Company

> the company went public > 公司上市

Same phrase, very different domains.

Important distinction 11: publicity vs advertising

advertising paid promotional messages.

publicity

public/media attention, which may be paid or unpaid and may be positive or negative.

A scandal can create a lot of publicity without being advertising.

Important distinction 12: publicity vs publication

publicity

宣傳 / 曝光

publication

出版 / 刊物 / 發表

They look similar but are very different.

> publicity campaign > 宣傳活動

> academic publication > 學術刊物 / 論文發表

Important distinction 13: publicly vs loudly

Kevin speaking publicly does not necessarily mean he spoke loudly.

publicly

other people could hear/know.

loudly

high volume.

The hurt in your passage comes from social exposure, not necessarily volume.

Important distinction 14: publicly vs officially

publicly

openly before others.

officially

in a formal or authorized capacity.

A person can publicly say something unofficially.

Family-extension note

The public family has several major modern branches:

1. open rather than private

- * publicly
- * public statement
- * make public
- * go public

2. society / general population

- * the public
- * public opinion
- * public figure

3. community/government-provided

- * public transport

- * public sector
- * public services

4. accessibility

- * publicly available
- * publicly accessible

5. business

- * publicly traded
- * go public

6. attention and promotion

- * publicity
- * publicise/publicize

For your passage, the exact meaning is:

publicly = in front of the other group members rather than speaking to the narrator privately

Master comparison

Form / expression	Traditional Chinese	Core idea
-----	-----	-----
publicly	公開地；當眾地	openly before others
say publicly	公開說	open statement
criticise publicly	公開批評	criticism before others
apologise publicly	公開道歉	open apology
admit publicly	公開承認	open admission publicly available	公開可取得的	public access publicly accessible	公眾可查閱 / 進入的	accessibility
publicly known	公開已知的	not secret

For your original sentence

> His words stung more than I expected, partly because I knew I had done my job, and partly because he said it so publicly.

Here:

publicly = 他不是私下跟我說，而是在全組人面前公開指責我

That public setting increases the emotional impact because the speaker is not only being accused unfairly, but is also being exposed and embarrassed before others.

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 他那番話比我想像中更刺耳，一方面是因為我明明有做好自己的事，另一方面是因為他竟然當着大家的面這樣說。

For this context, 「當着大家的面」 is more natural and emotionally precise than the mechanically literal 「公開地」.
