

Absolutely — reflection is an excellent polysemy target because your passage uses it here:

> “...the blurred reflections...”

Here reflection means an image seen on a shiny or smooth surface because light bounces back, especially the image of sky, plants, or light on water. But reflection also has important meanings involving careful thought, expression of qualities, consequences/indications, physics, and self-examination.

Word family: reflect / reflection / reflective / reflectively

Base verb: reflect

Noun: reflection

Adjective: reflective

Adverb: reflectively

Part of speech: noun (名詞) / verb-family forms (動詞詞族)

Your source phrase:

Practice 39

> “A reflection flips a figure across a line.”

「鏡射會把圖形沿著一條直線翻到另一側。」

reflection — geometry = 把圖形沿指定直線 / 平面作鏡像翻轉的變換

This is distinct from optical reflection, although conceptually related.

Important distinction: reflection vs shadow

reflection

= image created because light bounces from a surface.

shadow

= dark shape created because an object blocks light.

> reflection in water

> = 水中倒影

> shadow on the ground

> = 地上的影子

Very important learner contrast.

Important distinction: reflection vs image

image

broad:
any visual representation.

reflection

specifically:
an image produced by reflected light.

So:

> every reflection is an image
> but not every image is a reflection.

Important distinction: reflection vs mirror image

reflection

can be the physical image seen in a mirror/water.

mirror image

often emphasizes a reversed copy or extremely similar counterpart.

> reflection in the mirror > = 鏡中映像

> the two designs are mirror images > = 兩個設計互為鏡像

Important distinction: reflection vs glare

reflection

= returned image/light.

glare

= unpleasantly strong bright light.

> reflection on water > = 水面反光 / 倒影

> glare from the sun

> = 陽光刺眼的強光

Not the same.

Important distinction: reflection vs thought

thought

any idea/mental content.

reflection

usually more deliberate and considered.

> “I had a thought.”

= 我有一個想法。

> “After reflection, I changed my decision.”

= 深思後我改變決定。

Important distinction: reflection vs review

reflection

= think about meaning, lessons, feelings, implications.

review

= examine/evaluate something systematically.

For education:

> reflection on learning

> = 反思學習過程

> review of learning

> = 溫習 / 檢討學習內容

Different focus.

Important distinction: reflection vs self-reflection

reflection

can concern any topic.

self-reflection

specifically examines oneself.

> reflection on art

> = 對藝術的反思

> self-reflection

> = 自我反思

Important distinction: reflect vs show

You already have show mapped.

broadly makes something visible/apparent.

reflect

suggests that one thing reveals or corresponds to another.

> “The data shows a decline.”

= 數據顯示下降。

> “The data reflects changing behaviour.”

= 數據反映行為改變。

Reflect often emphasizes correspondence/representation.

Important distinction: reflect vs represent

represent

= stand for, depict, act on behalf of.

reflect

= reveal or mirror an underlying quality/state.

> “The painting represents a garden.”

= 畫作描繪 / 代表一個花園。

> “The painting reflects Monet’s interest in light.”

= 畫作反映 Monet 對光線的興趣。

Important distinction: reflect vs think

think

very broad.

reflect

more deliberate, careful, often retrospective.

> “I thought about the problem.”

= 我想過這個問題。

> “I reflected on the experience.”

= 我深入反思這段經歷。

Important distinction: reflective — optical vs thoughtful

Same adjective, two major meanings.

Optical

> reflective jacket

> = 反光外套

Mental

> reflective person

> = 愛深思 / 善於反思的人

Excellent MCQ contrast.

Family-extension sweep

After the full audit, the useful modern family includes:

* reflection — image = 倒影 / 映像
