Important distinction: room vs space

This is the most important contrast.

room

can mean:

1. a separate enclosed part of a building;
2. enough available space.

space

is much broader and does not normally mean an enclosed residential room by itself.

Compare:

> “This house has five rooms.”

= 這間屋有五個房間。

> “There isn’t enough space.”

= 沒有足夠空間。

For available capacity:

> room and space often overlap.

Important distinction: room = 房間 vs room = 空間

This is the central polysemy.

Countable room:

> “There are three rooms.”

= 有三個房間。

Uncountable room:

> “There isn’t enough room.”

= 沒有足夠空間。

So countability is a very useful clue:

> a room / rooms → 房間

> some room / enough room → 空間

Important distinction: room vs area

room

can be a walled interior space.

area

is broader:

* part of a room

* part of a city

* region

* subject field

> “the dining area”

may be an open section with no walls.

> “the dining room”

is usually a distinct room.

Important distinction: room vs chamber

room

ordinary everyday word.

chamber

more formal/specialized and can refer to:

- * official rooms
- * enclosed cavities
- * historical bedrooms
- * legislative chambers

For ordinary homes:

> room

is normally the natural choice.

Important distinction: room vs hall

room

= enclosed area for a particular purpose.

hall

can mean:

- * passage inside a house
- * large public room
- * large event building

So:

> living room ≠ hall

although in some regional English varieties, hall can refer to a main sitting area.

Important distinction: room vs apartment

room

= one part of a dwelling.

apartment/flat

= a complete residential unit containing one or more rooms.

> rent a room

does not necessarily mean:

> rent an entire apartment.

Important distinction: room for someone vs seat for someone room for someone

= enough physical capacity for them generally.

seat for someone

= an actual place to sit.

> "There's room for one more."

may mean enough general space.

> "There's a seat for one more."

specifically means one more chair/place to sit.

Important distinction: make room vs move

move

= change position.

make room

= move/rearrange specifically so that someone or something else has space.

So:

> moving is often the action,

while:

> making room is the purpose/result.

Important distinction: room for improvement vs possibility

room for improvement

specifically means:

> current quality can still become better.

possibility

is much broader:

> something may happen/be true.

So room here metaphorically conceptualizes improvement as needing available space.

Important distinction: room to grow — physical vs figurative

Physical:

> “Leave room for the plant to grow.”

= 預留植物生長空間。

Figurative:

> “The company has room to grow.”

= 公司有進一步發展空間。

The figurative meaning is built directly from physical space.

Important distinction: the room = physical place vs people

Compare:

> “The room was small.”

= 房間很小。 versus:

> “The room burst into laughter.”

= 房內所有人突然大笑。

A physical room cannot literally laugh, so the second uses room metonymically for its occupants.

Important distinction: room vs accommodation

room

= one particular room/place to sleep.

accommodation

= broader lodging provision, potentially including:

- * hotel room
- * apartment
- * hostel bed
- * house

So accommodation is the broader travel/housing term.

Important distinction: roomy vs big big

= large overall.

roomy

= specifically has plenty of usable interior space.

A car may look relatively small outside but still be:

> roomy inside.

Important distinction: roomy vs spacious

These are close.

roomy

more conversational and often used for:

- * cars
- * bags
- * apartments
- * clothing

spacious slightly more formal and strongly emphasizes abundant space.

Both:

= 寬敞的

Family-extension note

Room is a strong moderate polysemy word because it has two especially important core meanings:

- * countable physical room = 房間
- * uncountable available space/capacity = 空間 / 餘地

From the second, several highly productive figurative extensions develop:

- * room for improvement
- * room to grow
- * room for doubt
- * no room for error

Other established branches include:

- * room = occupants collectively
- * room = rented/hotel accommodation
- * room — verb = share accommodation

* roomy

* roominess

The crucial learner-facing point is that the different Chinese renderings of room for a chair, room for improvement, and room for doubt all preserve the same conceptual idea of available capacity, so they should be grouped rather than artificially split. This follows the manual's semantic-core principle.

For your original sentence

> “One minute, the living room becomes a space station, and the next it turns into a jungle...”

The exact meaning is:

room = 建築物內由牆壁分隔出來的一個實體房間

and specifically:

> living room = 客廳

Therefore:

> the living room becomes a space station

= 「客廳在 Leo 的想像中變成一個太空站」

This is the straightforward physical-room sense, not:

* there is no room = 沒有空間

* room for improvement = 有改善餘地

* the whole room laughed = 全場的人笑了

* book a room = 訂客房

* room with someone = 與某人合住

In the passage, the fun comes from Leo taking an ordinary physical room and imaginatively transforming it into completely different worlds.
