Important distinction 1: section vs part

part

very broad: any piece of a whole.

section

usually suggests the whole has been deliberately divided or organized into parts.

> my part of the project

我負責的部分

> my section of the presentation

簡報中明確分給我的部分

In your passage, both are possible, but section emphasizes the organized division of the group presentation.

Important distinction 2: section vs chapter

chapter

major numbered division of a book.

section

usually smaller and more flexible.

A chapter may contain several sections.

Important distinction 3: section vs paragraph

paragraph

specific block of sentences.

section

may contain many paragraphs and usually covers a broader topic.

Important distinction 4: section vs segment

section

general organized portion.

segment

often emphasizes a clearly separated piece or portion, especially in:

- * media
- * markets
- * geometry
- * time

They overlap, but section is more natural for reports and presentations.

Important distinction 5: section vs department

department

usually larger organizational unit.

section

can be a smaller division inside a department.

> finance department

> accounts section

Exact hierarchy varies by organization.

Important distinction 6: section vs area

area

general physical space.

section

suggests the space is regarded or designated as one part of a larger whole.

> an area of the park

a location in the park

> a section of the park

one identifiable portion of the park

Important distinction 7: section = document vs section = physical area

Document

> Section 4 of the report

報告第四節

Physical space

一段道路

Same basic idea—a divided part of a larger whole—but different domains.

Important distinction 8: section = group of people

> a section of society

does not mean a physical slice.

It means:

a subgroup within a larger population

Important distinction 9: section vs cross-section

section

a part or cut.

cross-section

specifically a cut across something, or figuratively a representative sample.

> cross-section of a pipe

管道橫切面

> cross-section of society

社會各階層的代表性樣本

Important distinction 10: section off vs divide

divide

general split into parts.

section off

specifically separate one area from the rest, often physically.

> section off part of the hall

把禮堂一部分隔開

Important distinction 11: sectional sofa

Here sectional does not mean “partly.”

It means:

made from separate units/sections that fit together

So:

> sectional sofa = 組合式梳化

Important distinction 12: music section vs musical piece section

Compare:

> string section

> = 弦樂組的人 / 樂器

> final section of the song

> = 歌曲最後一部分

Same noun, different referent.

Important distinction 13: section in law vs clause

section

often a major numbered legal division.

clause

a smaller provision or specific condition, especially in contracts.

Exact terminology depends on the legal document.

Family-extension note

Section has one strong semantic core:

a clearly separated or identifiable part of a larger whole

That core extends naturally across several domains:

1. assigned/content portion

- * my section
- * section of a presentation

2. document structure

- * Section 3
- * subsection

3. physical space

- * section of road
- * shop section

4. group of people

- * section of society

5. organization

- * finance section

6. scientific cutting

- * tissue section
- * cross-section

7. music

- * string section

8. law

* section of an Act

9. verb

* section something

* section off an area

So this is a strong example of one central “divided part” concept developing into many established domain meanings.

For your original sentence

> I had already finished my section the night before and sent it to the group chat.

Here:

section = 小組簡報中分配給我、由我負責完成的那一部分內容

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 我前一天晚上其實已經完成了自己負責的部分，還發到了小組聊天裡。

The useful nuance is:

> part = 很廣義的「一部分」

> section = 較有結構、經劃分的一部分

So section works especially well because the presentation had been divided among different group members.
