Ryan let the speaker use or look at his notes.

繁體中文： 把自己擁有、使用或掌握的東西給別人一起使用、查看或享用；分享

中文翻譯：

> "...he quietly shared his notes with me..."

「.....他在小息時靜靜地把自己的筆記分享給我 / 給我看.....」

Here:

share notes with someone = 把自己的筆記給對方查看、參考或一起使用

1. share something with someone (物品 / 資料) — 分享；共用

This is the meaning used in your passage.

Meaning: To let another person use, see, have, or experience something that you have.

Practice 1 — Original

> "He shared his notes with me."

「他把自己的筆記分享給我 / 給我看。」

Practice 2

> “She shared her lunch with her friend.”

「她把自己的午餐分給朋友一起吃。」

Practice 3

> “Can you share the document with me?”

share something with someone = 讓別人一起使用、查看、享用或取得自己擁有的東西

Common:

- * share food
- * share notes
- * share a document
- * share information
- * share a photo

These belong to one broad give access/use jointly sense.

2. share = use/have something jointly (共同擁有 / 使用) — 共用 ; 共同擁有

Share can mean that two or more people use, own, or occupy the same thing.

Practice 4

> “The two children share a bedroom.”

「兩個孩子共用一間睡房。」

Practice 5

> “We share the same office.”

「我們共用同一間辦公室。」

share something = 兩個或以上的人共同擁有、使用或佔用同一樣東西

This is closely related to Meaning 1, but the grammar differs:

* share something with someone

* two people share something

For strict counting, I would merge both under the broader joint use/possession concept.

3. share = divide something among people (分配) — 分 ; 分配 ; 分給

Share can mean dividing something so that several people each receive part of it.

Practice 6

> “We shared the cake between us.”

「獎金由得獎者平均分配。」

share something among/between people = 把整體分成若干部分，讓不同人各自得到一部分

This is a major abstract use.

Practice 8

> “She shared her ideas with the group.”

Practice 9

> “He rarely shares his feelings.”

「他很少說出 / 分享自己的感受。」 share information/ideas/feelings = 把自己知道、想到或感受到的內容告訴別人

This is an abstract extension of giving access.

For core counting, I would usually keep it under the same broad make available to others meaning, but show it explicitly because it is extremely common.

5. share = have the same experience/quality/opinion (共同具有) — 共有 ; 有共同.....

Share can mean that two or more people have the same quality, experience, belief, interest, etc.

That makes it distinct enough to treat separately.

Practice 12

> “They shared many happy memories.”

「他們*共同擁有 / 經歷*了很多快樂回憶。」

Practice 13

> “The whole team shared the disappointment.”

share an experience/emotion = 多個人共同經歷或感受到同一件事情

For counting, I would merge this with Meaning 5 under the broader:

> have something in common sense.

In digital contexts, share means to make online content available to other users.

Practice 15

> “Please don’t share the link publicly.”

「請不要公開分享這個連結。」

share content = 透過網絡、應用程式或社交平台把內容提供給其他人查看

This is a modern domain extension of the ordinary make available to others meaning.

For core counting, I would merge it into Meaning 1 rather than create a separate lexical sense.

As a noun, share can mean the part of something that belongs to or is allocated to one person.

share = 公司所有權被劃分出來的一個單位；股份 / 股票

This is genuinely distinct from the general “portion” meaning for learners, even though historically it develops from “a part.”

Share can also mean a proportion of a total amount.

shareholder = 持有公司股份的人或機構；股東

This belongs to the financial branch of share.

Important distinction: share vs give give usually transfers something from one person to another.

share

usually means the original person still uses, possesses, or has access to it too.

> “I gave him my lunch.”

may mean he received it.

> “I shared my lunch with him.”

means we both had some.

So share emphasizes joint access or division.

Important distinction: share vs divide divide focuses on separating something into parts.

share

focuses on how those parts or benefits are distributed among people.

> “Divide the cake into six pieces.”

> “Share the cake among six people.”

Different focus.

Important distinction: share vs exchange

share

does not require receiving something in return.

exchange

usually involves both sides giving and receiving.

> “She shared her notes with me.”

= 她給我看她的筆記。

> “We exchanged notes.”

= 我們彼此交換筆記 / 資料。

This distinction is especially important for your original sentence.

Ryan shared his notes; the speaker did not necessarily give notes back.

Important distinction: share vs tell tell means communicate information directly.

share

often sounds more collaborative, personal, or voluntary.

> “She told me the news.”

> “She shared the news with me.”

Both communicate information, but share emphasizes making information available to another person.

Important distinction: share vs common

Compare:

> “We share the same interests.”

and:

> “We have interests in common.”

Both mean:

「我們有共同興趣。」

share is the verb; in common is a fixed phrase.

Countability note

The noun share is countable when it means an allocated part or company ownership unit:

> a share

> two shares

> my share

But the verb share does not take this countability distinction.

This is useful because:

> “a share of the cost”

means:

費用的一部分 / 份額

while:

> “shares in a company”

means:

公司的股份

Useful expression: fair share — 應有的一份；合理份額

Practice 26

> “Everyone should do their fair share.”

「每個人都應該完成自己*應做的一份*。」

Practice 27

> “The region receives its fair share of funding.”

「這個地區獲得其*合理份額*的資助。」 fair share = 按公平原則某人應獲得或承擔的一部分

Useful expression: share something equally — 平分

Practice 28

> “We shared the cost equally.”

「我們*平均分擔*費用。」

Practice 29

> “The children shared the sweets equally.”

「孩子們把糖果*平均分配*。」

This belongs to the division/distribution sense.

Family-extension note

The practical modern family includes:

* share
* shares
* shared
* sharing
* shareholder

Useful constructions include:

* share something with someone
* share a room
* share information
* share feelings
* share the same interests
* fair share
* market share
* shares in a company
* file sharing

The Golden Manual says domain uses and productive constructions should be checked broadly, while contexts that still express the same semantic idea should be merged rather than artificially split.

For your original sentence

> "...he quietly shared his notes with me during recess..."

The exact meaning is:

share = 讓另一個人使用、查看或參考自己擁有的東西

So:

> share his notes with me

= 把他的筆記給我看 / 讓我參考他的筆記

Crucially, this does not imply a two-way exchange. Ryan gave the speaker access to his notes.

For your database, I would count 5 genuinely useful core meanings for share:

1. let others use, see, or have access to something
2. divide/distribute something among people
3. have the same quality, experience, opinion, or interest
4. noun — a person's portion or proportion of a whole
5. noun — a unit of ownership in a company

I would merge digital sharing and sharing information/feelings into #1, merge market share into #4, and keep shareholder as a family extension rather than inflate the core count.
