Practice 2

> His speakership lasted several years.

他的議長任期持續了數年。

MCQ-ready definition:

speakership = the office, role, or period of serving as Speaker

This is useful for recognition but less central for everyday learners.

Important distinction 1: speaker vs person speaking

speaker

can be any person formally or currently speaking.

person speaking

plain descriptive phrase.

In presentations and meetings, speaker is the natural role noun.

> order of speakers

發言次序

is much more natural than:

> order of people speaking

Important distinction 2: speaker vs presenter

Very relevant to your passage.

speaker

focuses on the person who speaks.

presenter

focuses on the person delivering a presentation or introducing content.

In a university group presentation, each person may be both a speaker and a presenter.

But:

> conference speaker

講者

does not necessarily mean they are using slides.

Important distinction 3: speaker vs lecturer

speaker

very broad; anyone giving a talk.

lecturer

usually:

- * a university teaching role, or
- * someone giving a lecture.

A guest speaker does not automatically become a lecturer.

Important distinction 4: speaker vs spokesperson

speaker

person who speaks.

spokesperson person officially speaking on behalf of an organization/person.

> conference speaker

會議講者

> company spokesperson

公司發言人

Do not confuse them.

Important distinction 5: speaker vs narrator

speaker

person actually speaking in a situation or text.

narrator

voice/person telling a story.

In poetry analysis, speaker can also mean the voice speaking in the poem, which may not be the author.

21. *speaker (文學 / 詩歌中的說話者) — 詩中說話者；敘述聲音***

A useful academic sense.

Practice 1

> The speaker in the poem feels lonely.

詩中的*說話者*感到孤單。

Practice 2

> We should not automatically assume that the speaker is the poet.

我們不應自動假設詩中的*說話者*就是詩人本人。

MCQ-ready definition:

*speaker = 文學作品，尤其詩歌中發出說話聲音的角色或敘述者***

Important distinction 6: *speaker = person vs speaker = device***

This is the biggest polysemy split.

Person

> The next speaker is Kevin.

下一位講者是 Kevin。

Device

> The speaker is too loud.

喇叭聲太大。

The surrounding verbs and context usually disambiguate immediately.

Important distinction 7: speaker vs loudspeaker

speaker

broad everyday device term.

loudspeaker

more explicit/full term for the sound-output device.

In ordinary tech English, speaker is overwhelmingly common.

Important distinction 8: speaker vs headphone

speaker

plays sound into the surrounding space.

headphones

play sound directly to the listener's ears.

So:

> speaker output = everyone nearby can hear > headphone output = primarily wearer hears

Important distinction 9: on speaker vs speakerphone

on speaker

adverbial phrase:

> Put him on speaker.

開免提。

speakerphone

phone/device mode enabling hands-free sound.

They refer to closely related concepts.

Important distinction 10: speaker = language user vs native speaker

English speaker

anyone who speaks English.

native English speaker

someone who acquired English as a first/native language.

So:

> speaker $\neq$ native speaker

A highly fluent second-language user is still an English speaker.

Important distinction 11: fluent speaker vs native speaker

fluent speaker

describes proficiency.

native speaker

describes language-acquisition background.

A non-native speaker can be extremely fluent.

Important distinction 12: Speaker capitalization

lowercase speaker

ordinary person/device:

> guest speaker

> Bluetooth speaker

capitalized Speaker

often official institutional title:

- > the Speaker
- > Speaker of the House

Capitalization can change the interpretation.

Important distinction 13: speaker notes vs speaking notes

Both can occur, but:

speaker notes

especially common in presentation software: notes attached to slides for the presenter.

speaking notes

notes prepared to guide what someone says.

They overlap but are not always identical.

Family-extension note

Speaker has four especially strong modern branches:

1. person who speaks publicly

- * speaker
- * guest speaker
- * keynote speaker
- * public speaker

2. language user

- * English speaker
- * native speaker
- * non-native speaker

3. sound-output device

- * speaker
- * Bluetooth speaker
- * speaker system

* on speaker

4. official presiding officer

* the Speaker

* Speaker of the House

There is also an academic/literary extension:

5. voice in a poem/text

* the speaker in the poem

For your passage, the exact branch is:

speaker = each group member who has a speaking/presentation turn

For your original sentence

> I was editing the final slides, checking the order of speakers, and trying to make sure that everything was under control.

Here:

speakers = 小組簡報中輪流負責發言的組員

So:

> order of speakers

> = 每位組員發言 / 上台簡報的先後次序

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 我當時正在修改最後的投影片、確認每個人的*發言次序*，並且努力確保一切都在掌握之中。

The crucial distinction is that speaker here means 發言者, not 揚聲器, 語言使用者, or the institutional title 議長.
