Important distinction: warm vs hot

warm

= pleasantly or moderately high temperature

> “warm tea”

= 溫熱的茶

hot

= high temperature

> “hot tea”

= 熱茶

Hot is stronger.

The exact boundary is contextual.

Important distinction: warm vs mild

warm weather

= noticeably comfortable/high temperature.

mild weather

= not extreme; neither very hot nor very cold.

A winter day can be mild without truly feeling warm.

Important distinction: warm person vs friendly person

These overlap strongly.

= behaves in a pleasant, welcoming way.

warm

often adds a stronger emotional nuance:

> genuine affection, care, sincerity, and emotional openness.

A person can be professionally friendly without feeling particularly warm.

Important distinction: warm vs kind

kind

focuses on:

> considerate and helpful behaviour.

warm

focuses more on:

> the emotional feeling someone creates through their friendliness and affection.

Your grandmother is both:

* kind because she cares for people

* warm because her manner makes people feel welcomed and cared for Important distinction: warm vs loving

warm

means:

> friendly, emotionally welcoming, affectionate.

loving

means:

> actively showing deep love and affection.

A person can be warm toward strangers without loving them.

So loving is stronger and more relationship-specific.

Important distinction: warm vs affectionate

affectionate

directly means showing fondness and physical/verbal affection.

warm

is broader and can be shown through:

* tone

* manner

* friendliness

* emotional openness

Someone can be warm without being openly affectionate.

Important distinction: warm personality vs warm temperature

This is the core polysemy contrast.

warm room

= 溫暖的房間

warm person

= 親切友善的人

The figurative personality sense develops naturally from the physical association:

> physical warmth → comfort → emotional warmth.

Important distinction: warm welcome vs warm person

warm person

describes someone's general personality.

warm welcome

describes the way someone is received.

Both share:

> friendliness + emotional positivity.

Important distinction: warm response vs positive response

positive response

= favourable reaction.

warm response

= favourable and enthusiastic reaction.

So warm adds emotional enthusiasm.

Important distinction: warmly vs warmly dressed

Be careful about structure.

warmly welcome

Here warmly means:

> in a friendly/enthusiastic way.

warmly dressed

Here it means:

> wearing clothes that keep you warm.

> “She was warmly dressed.”

= 她穿得很保暖。

Same adverb, different underlying sense.

Important distinction: warmth — physical vs emotional

physical warmth

> “the warmth of the fire”

= 火的暖意

emotional warmth

> “the warmth of her personality”

= 她性格中的親切溫情

This is one of the clearest family polysemy contrasts.

Important distinction: warm-hearted vs warm

warm

can simply mean friendly and approachable.

warm-hearted

more strongly suggests:

- * kindness
- * compassion
- * generosity
- * genuine concern for others

So warm-hearted is a stronger character judgment.

Important distinction: warm to vs like

like someone

= have a positive feeling toward them.

warm to someone

= gradually begin to like or accept them.

The change over time is the key part:

> cold/neutral → warmer → positive.

For your original sentence

> “People often describe her as warm, patient, and quietly wise.”

The exact meaning is:

warm = 待人親切、友善、有關懷感，而且容易令別人感到舒服和被接納

Therefore:

> a warm person

= 「一個待人親切溫暖、讓人容易感到安心和親近的人」

In your passage, this meaning is reinforced by her behaviour:

- > making tea
- > cutting fruit
- > caring for everyone
- > listening rather than dominating conversations

So warm describes the emotional effect of her personality on other people.

It does not mean physical temperature.

The semantic connection is:

> physical warmth → comfort and safety → emotional warmth

which explains why English naturally uses warm for both:

> a warm room

> = 溫暖的房間

and:

> a warm person

> = 親切溫暖的人.
