BF. ADOPTION VS ACCEPTANCE

57. adoption vs acceptance

acceptance

= people regard something as acceptable/legitimate.

adoption

= people actually begin using/implementing it.

Someone may:

> accept EVs as a good idea

but still not:

> adopt one.

Excellent source distinction.

BG. ADOPTION VS AWARENESS

awareness

= knowing something exists.

adoption

= actually starting to use it.

Typical progression:

> awareness → consideration → trial → adoption

So high awareness does not guarantee adoption.

BH. ADOPTION VS PURCHASE

= one act of buying.

adoption

= broader process of beginning to use/accept a product or technology.

A person can adopt:

- * free software
- * a practice
- * a standard

without purchasing anything.

For EVs, purchase may be one pathway to adoption.

BI. ADOPTION VS USE

58. adoption vs use

use

= operate/use something.

adoption

= decision/process of taking it up as a regular solution.

Trying an EV once:

> use

Switching to an EV as your normal vehicle:

> adoption.

BJ. ADOPTION VS UPTAKE

59. adoption vs uptake

adoption

= acceptance and actual use of a technology/practice.

uptake

= extent/rate at which people take up an offering.

Very close.

> EV adoption

> vaccine uptake > service uptake

Uptake often emphasizes measured participation rate.

BK. ADOPTION VS DIFFUSION

60. adoption vs diffusion

Innovation studies.

adoption

= individual/organization starts using innovation.

diffusion

= innovation spreads through a population/system over time.

So:

> many individual adoptions create diffusion.

BL. ADOPTION VS IMPLEMENTATION

61. adoption vs implementation

adoption

= decision to accept/use a system/policy.

implementation

= practical process of putting it into operation.

A company may:

> adopt a policy today

but:

> implement it over six months.

Very important institutional distinction.

BM. ADOPTION VS DEPLOYMENT

adoption

= organization/user accepts and uses technology.

deployment

= technology is installed/rolled out technically.

A system can be deployed but users may still resist adoption.

BN. ADOPTION VS ROLLOUT

rollout

= staged introduction/release.

adoption

= users actually take it up.

A successful rollout does not automatically mean successful adoption.

BO. ADOPTION VS APPROVAL

62. adoption vs approval

approval

= authorization/agreement.

adoption

= formal acceptance or actual uptake depending context.

A policy may be:

> approved

> then formally adopted

depending on procedure.

In technology:

> approval is not the same as user adoption.

BP. ADOPT VS ACCEPT

accept

= agree/receive without rejection.

adopt

= actively take up and start using.

> accept an idea

> = 接受想法

> adopt an approach

> = 採取做法

Stronger behavioral implication with adopt.

BQ. ADOPT VS USE

use

= perform with something.

adopt

= choose it as your method/system/practice.

You can use something temporarily without adopting it.

BR. ADOPT VS CHOOSE

choose

= select among options.

adopt

= select and take into use/practice.

Choosing may precede adoption.

BS. ADOPT VS IMPLEMENT

adopt a policy

= formally accept it.

implement a policy

= carry it out.

Again:

> decision vs execution.

BT. ADOPT VS INTRODUCE

introduce

= bring something into use/environment.

adopt

= receive/start using it.

Government:

> introduces incentive scheme

Drivers:

> adopt EVs.

Perspective differs.

BU. ADOPT VS EMBRACE

63. adopt vs embrace

adopt

= begin using formally/practically.

embrace

= accept enthusiastically.

> company adopted new system > neutral > company embraced new system > suggests enthusiasm.

BV. ADOPT VS SWITCH TO

adopt

= broader formal uptake.

switch to = change from existing option to another.

EV context:

> adopt electric vehicles > can include first-time drivers.

> switch to electric vehicles > specifically implies replacing another type.

BW. ADOPT VS CONVERT TO

convert to = change an existing system/form to another.

adopt

= start using.

A fleet may:

> adopt EVs

or:

> convert its fleet to electric vehicles.

The latter emphasizes transformation from previous state.

BX. ADOPTION VS PENETRATION

64. adoption vs market penetration

adoption

= people/organizations taking up product.

market penetration

= product's presence/share within market.

More adoption usually increases penetration, but they are not identical metrics.

BY. ADOPTION RATE VS MARKET SHARE

adoption rate

= proportion/rate of users who adopt.

market share

= proportion of sales/market held by a product/company.

EV sales share can rise before EVs form a large share of total vehicles on the road.

Very important analytical distinction.

BZ. ADOPTION RATE VS SALES

sales

= number/value of products sold.

adoption

= actual uptake/use.

One sale may represent one adoption, but:

- * fleets complicate counts
- * second-hand sales may not add a new vehicle to total stock
- * free technologies can be adopted without sales

So they are related, not identical.

CA. ADOPTION — CHILD VS TECHNOLOGY

This is the biggest lexical contrast:

> adoption of a child

> = 收養

> adoption of a technology

> = 採用 / 普及

Same word, radically different Chinese translation.

The conceptual bridge is:

> take something/someone into an established relationship or practice as your own

That underlying idea connects the branches.

CB. ADOPT — CORE SEMANTIC IDEA

Across many senses, adopt means:

> take something not previously yours/used by you and make it part of your own life, system, practice, identity, or responsibility

Examples:

technology

> adopt software

policy

> adopt rules

method

> adopt approach

child

> adopt child

attitude

> adopt stance

name

> adopt name

That is the best memory key.

CC. ADOPTIVE VS ADOPTED

Again, keep these sharply separated:

> adoptive parents

> = 收養孩子的父母 > adopted child

> = 被收養的孩子

Not:

> adopted parents for ordinary intended meaning ❌

CD. ADOPTER VS ADOPTEE

adopter

= one who adopts

= 採用者 / 收養者 depending context

adoptee

= one who is adopted

= 被收養人

In technology:

> adopter = user/company

In family context:

> adopter = adoptive parent, though adoptive parent is more natural.

CE. ADOPTION — COUNTABILITY

Usually uncountable for process:

> “EV adoption is increasing.”

Countable in specific adoption event/case:

> “The agency completed three adoptions.”

That second use usually concerns:

* children

* animals

* formal cases

So grammar changes with domain.

CF. “AN ADOPTION” — CHILD/ANIMAL CASE

65. an adoption = one particular act/case of adoption — 一宗收養 / 領養

Practice 111

> “The shelter completed twenty adoptions this month.”

「收容所本月完成了二十宗領養。」

Practice 112

> “The adoption was finalized in court.”

「這宗收養程序在法院完成。」

CG. ADOPTION — TECHNOLOGY USUALLY UNCOUNTABLE

For technology:

> “adoption is increasing”

Less natural:

> “an adoption”

> unless referring to:

> one organization’s specific adoption decision.

Example:

> “The company’s adoption of the software was successful.”

So:

> process noun is normally uncountable.

CH. ADOPTION — REGISTER

adoption in technology/business is:

* formal

* analytical

* common in reports

* common in economics/marketing/policy

Everyday speech may prefer:

- * start using
- * switch to
- * take up

Example:

Formal:

> “EV adoption remains low.”

Everyday:

> “Not many people are using electric cars yet.”

CI. ADOPTION IN YOUR PASSAGE — IMPORTANT NUANCE

Your passage says:

> “convenience is not a luxury in modern transport; it is the condition on which adoption depends.”

The writer is making a behavioral point:

People may:

- * believe EVs are greener
- * support environmental goals
- * like the technology

but still not:

> adopt EVs

unless they can use them conveniently.

So adoption here specifically means:

> movement from positive attitude/intention to actual sustained use.

That is stronger than:

- > interest
- > approval

- > awareness
- > preference

CJ. SOURCE-SPECIFIC SEMANTIC CHAIN

The paragraph argues:

- > willing to switch
- > → need reliable charging
- > → charging must fit daily life
- > → otherwise convenience barrier remains
- > → adoption stays low

So:

- > adoption = actual behavioral uptake

not merely:

- > liking the idea.

This distinction is central to the paragraph.

CK. ADOPTION VS INTENTION — SOURCE-SPECIFIC

intention

= plan/desire to act.

adoption

= actual use.

Drivers may have:

- > green intentions

without:

- > EV adoption.

This is almost the thesis of your passage.

CL. ADOPTION VS CHOICE — SOURCE-SPECIFIC

choice

= one decision among alternatives.

adoption

= broader process of taking a technology into regular use.

Buying one EV:

> choice/purchase

Wider population changing behavior:

> adoption.

CM. ADOPTION VS POPULARITY

You previously curated popularity.

popularity

= how liked/favored something is.

adoption

= how much it is actually used.

A technology can be:

> popular in opinion

but have:

> low adoption

because of cost or inconvenience.

Excellent distinction.

CN. ADOPTION VS VISIBILITY

You curated visibility.

visibility

= how noticeable/prominent something is.

adoption

= how widely used it is.

More visible taxis/minibuses may:

> encourage adoption

but visibility itself is not adoption.

CO. ADOPTION VS APPROVAL

You curated approval.

approval

= positive judgment/support.

adoption

= taking into actual use.

This sentence is especially useful:

> “Public approval does not automatically translate into adoption.”

「公眾認同不一定會自動轉化為實際採用。」

This combines approval + translate + adoption beautifully.

CP. ADOPTION VS DEPENDENCE

You curated dependence.

adoption depends on convenience

= 普及取決於便利性 dependence on technology

= 對科技的依賴

Completely different relationship.

CQ. PRONUNCIATION

adopt /ə'dɒpt/ BrE, /ə'dɑːpt/ AmE

adoption /ə'dɒpʃən/ BrE

adopter /ə'dɒptə(r)/

adoptive /ə'dɒptɪv/

Stress remains on:

> DOPT

Note spelling shift:

> adopt → adoption

not:

> adoption with “t” sound preserved.

The /t/ changes into the /ʃ/ sound in:

> adoption.
