appointment

= arrangement to meet a particular person/service at a specified time, often professional

預約；約定會面

meeting

= event where people come together to discuss, decide, plan, etc.

會議；會面

Compare:

> doctor's appointment

> 看醫生的預約

> staff meeting

> 員工會議

An appointment may involve only two people and does not necessarily involve discussion as a group.

36. appointment vs reservation

appointment

= reserves a person/professional's time

預約會面 / 服務

reservation

= usually reserves a table, room, seat, ticket, etc.

預訂；預約

appointment

= specifically an arranged meeting/visit at a particular time

You can book an appointment.

38. appointment vs session

This contrast is particularly useful because both appear in the passage.

appointment

= the arranged meeting/time slot

預約；約定時段

session

= the actual block of time during which treatment, training, discussion, etc. takes place

一次治療 / 課節 / 活動時段

Compare:

> I have a physiotherapy appointment at 3:00.

> 我三點預約了物理治療。

> The physiotherapy session lasts 45 minutes.

> 那次物理治療持續四十五分鐘。

39. appointment vs date

date

can mean an arranged social/romantic meeting

約會

appointment

usually sounds more formal or practical/professional

預約

Compare:

> dentist appointment

> 牙醫預約

> dinner date

> 晚餐約會

40. appointment vs schedule

schedule

= overall plan showing when many events/tasks occur

日程；時間表

appointment

= one particular arranged meeting inside that schedule

一個預約

41. appointment vs nomination

appointment

= official act of putting someone into a job/position

任命

nomination

= proposing someone as a candidate, often before final selection

提名

Compare:

> her nomination for the position

> 她獲提名角逐該職位

> her appointment to the position

> 她正式獲任命擔任該職位

42. appoint vs hire

hire

= employ someone for paid work

Meaning map

The family has two major modern branches.

A. Arranged time / meeting

Passage

take elderly people to appointments

→ 陪長者赴預約 / 赴約

Medical

doctor's appointment

→ 醫生預約

Scheduling

make an appointment

→ 預約

Attendance

keep an appointment

→ 如期赴約

Availability

by appointment only

→ 只限預約

The central idea is:

a specific time is officially or personally set aside beforehand

B. Official selection to a role

Noun

appointment as director

→ 任命為董事

Verb

appoint a manager

→ 任命經理

Person

appointee

→ 獲任命者

Adjective

appointed representative

→ 獲委任的代表

This branch keeps the older idea of assigning/designating something officially.

There is also a formal time/place extension:

> appointed time

> → 約定 / 指定時間

And a lexicalized furnishing expression:

> well-appointed room

> → 設備完善、裝潢講究的房間

Passage recap

> “He helped children with homework, accompanied elderly people to appointments, and discovered that real maturity was not about being noticed, but about being dependable.”

Here:

appointment = a meeting or visit arranged in advance for a particular time

Best Traditional Chinese:

* 預約

* 約定會面

* contextually: 陪長者赴約 / 去預約好的地方

Natural contextual translation:

他會幫孩子做功課，陪長者赴預約，也逐漸明白真正的成熟並不是受人注意，而是成為一個值得依靠的人。

Passage MCQ-ready meaning

appointment

= an arrangement to meet someone or receive a service at a particular time

預約；約定會面

The biggest learner split is:

> doctor's appointment

> → 醫生預約

> make an appointment

> → 預約

> keep an appointment

> → 按時赴約

but:

> her appointment as director

> → 她*獲任命為董事*

> appoint a manager

> → 任命一名經理

> appointee

> → 獲任命者

And one especially useful passage-level contrast is:

> appointment

> → 預先安排好的時間 / 會面

whereas:

> session

> → 實際進行治療、培訓、討論等的一段活動時間

So in this passage, appointment uses the everyday scheduled meeting/visit branch, not the formal 任命 sense.
