

Absolutely — appreciate is a strong target because your passage uses it here:

> “Over time, I came to appreciate it more.”

Here appreciate means to understand and value something more deeply, not simply “to like” it. The word also has important meanings involving gratitude, understanding the significance of something, financial increase in value, and polite/formal requests.

Word family: appreciate / appreciation / appreciative / appreciatively

Base word: appreciate

Verb forms: appreciate, appreciates, appreciated, appreciating

Related forms: appreciation, appreciative, appreciatively

Part of speech: verb (動詞)

Your sentence:

> “Over time, I came to appreciate it more.”

Meaning in your passage: appreciate = understand and value more deeply — 更懂得欣賞；更加珍視

Here appreciate means:

> to gradually understand the qualities, value, beauty, or significance of something and therefore value it more.

繁體中文：

逐漸看懂、理解並重視某事物的優點、價值、美感或意義；懂得欣賞、更加珍視

Natural translation:

> “Over time, I came to appreciate it more.”

「隨著時間過去，我愈來愈懂得欣賞 / 更加欣賞這幅畫。」

So here:

> appreciate = 理解其價值後更加欣賞

1. appreciate + art/music/quality — 欣賞；懂得欣賞

The core source sense.

14. appreciatively = with gratitude or admiration — 感激地；欣賞地

Practice 28

> “She smiled appreciatively.”

「她感激地 / 帶著欣賞地微笑。」

Practice 29

> “He nodded appreciatively at the painting.”

「他看著畫作，欣賞地點了點頭。」

appreciatively = 以感激、賞識或欣賞的態度

Important distinction: appreciate vs like like

= simply enjoy/prefer something.

appreciate

= recognize its value/quality and value it.

> “I like the painting.”

= 我喜歡這幅畫。

> “I appreciate the painting.”

= 我理解並欣賞這幅畫的價值 / 美感。

So appreciate is often deeper/more evaluative.

Important distinction: appreciate vs enjoy

enjoy

= get pleasure from an experience.

appreciate

= understand/value the quality or significance.

> “I enjoy listening to jazz.”

= 我享受聽 jazz。

> “I appreciate jazz.”

= 我懂得欣賞 jazz。

You can appreciate something without finding it immediately enjoyable.

Important distinction: appreciate vs admire

admire

= feel respect or approval, often strongly.

appreciate

= recognize and value qualities.

> “I admire Monet.”

= 我敬佩 Monet。

> “I appreciate Monet’s use of light.”

= 我欣賞 Monet 對光線的運用。

So:

admire often targets the person or excellence, while appreciate often targets quality/value.

Important distinction: appreciate vs understand understand

= comprehend meaning/facts.

appreciate

= understand with recognition of significance/value.

> “I understand the problem.”

= 我明白問題。

> “I appreciate how serious the problem is.”

= 我充分理解這問題有多嚴重。

Appreciate often implies deeper awareness.

Important distinction: appreciate vs value

value

= regard as important/valuable.

appreciate

= recognize qualities and therefore value.

> “I value honesty.”

= 我重視誠實。

> “I appreciate your honesty.”

= 我感激 / 欣賞你的坦誠。

Different focus.

Important distinction: appreciate vs thank thank

= explicitly express gratitude.

appreciate

= feel gratitude / value the help.

> “Thank you for helping.”

= 謝謝你幫忙。

> “I appreciate your help.”

= 我很感激你的幫忙。

One is an act of thanking; the other expresses the internal evaluation/feeling.

Important distinction: appreciate vs be grateful

Very close in gratitude contexts.

appreciate

often takes the thing/action directly:

> “I appreciate your support.”

be grateful

usually takes:

* for + noun

* to + person

> “I’m grateful for your support.”

Both:

「我很感激你的支持。」

Important distinction: appreciate vs depreciate

Financial opposites.

appreciate

= rise in value

depreciate

= fall in value

> currency appreciates

> = 貨幣升值

> currency depreciates

> = 貨幣貶值

Excellent MCQ contrast.

Important distinction: appreciation — art vs gratitude vs finance

Same noun, three major domains:

Art/value

> appreciation of art

> = 藝術欣賞 / 鑑賞

Gratitude

> appreciation for your help

> = 感謝 / 謝意

Finance

> capital appreciation

> = 資本升值

This is one of the strongest polysemy points in the family.

Important grammar note: appreciate + noun / gerund

Natural:

> “I appreciate your help.”

> “I appreciate you helping me.”

> “I appreciate hearing your opinion.”

Less natural/standard for the gratitude meaning:

> I appreciate to hear your opinion. ❌

Use a noun, gerund, or clause instead.

Important grammar note: appreciate + wh-clause

Very common for “understand fully”:

> “I appreciate how difficult this is.”

> “We appreciate why people are concerned.”

Here appreciate means:

> understand/recognize fully not:

> be thankful for

Context decides.
