

Absolutely — bake is a useful secondary polysemy/family target because your passage uses it indirectly here:

> “The aroma of freshly baked bread was drifting out onto the street...”

Here baked means cooked using dry heat, usually in an oven. But the family also has important meanings involving baking food, hardening materials by heat, becoming extremely hot, and informal/slang uses.

Word family: bake / baked / baking / baker / bakery

Base word: bake

Verb forms: bake, bakes, baked, baking

Related person noun: baker

Related place noun: bakery

Part of speech: verb (動詞) / participial adjective (分詞形容詞)

Meaning in your passage: baked = cooked by dry heat in an oven — 烘焙的；烤製的

Your phrase:

> “freshly baked bread”

Here baked means:

> cooked using dry heat, especially in an oven, until the food is properly cooked and often browned.

繁體中文：

利用焗爐等乾熱方式把食物烤熟，通常令表面變乾、變香或上色；烘焙的、烤製的

Natural translation:

> “freshly baked bread”

「新鮮出爐的麵包」

Important distinction: bake vs cook

cook

very broad:

prepare food using heat.

bake

specific:

cook using dry heat, usually in an oven.

So:

> all baking is cooking

> but not all cooking is baking.

Important distinction: bake vs roast

bake

often:

- * bread
- * cakes
- * pastries
- * potatoes

roast

often:

- * meat
- * vegetables
- * coffee beans

Both use dry heat, usually in an oven, but collocations differ.

- > bake a cake
- > roast a chicken

Important distinction: bake vs grill

bake

= surrounding dry heat in oven.

grill

= strong direct heat, often from above/below.

- > baked bread
- > = 烘焙麵包

- > grilled vegetables
- > = 烤 / 燒蔬菜

Important distinction: bake vs toast

bake

= cook food through.

toast

= brown/crisp an already prepared surface, especially bread.

> bake bread

> = 把生麵糰烤成麵包

> toast bread

> = 把已有麵包烤至表面香脆

Very important.

Important distinction: bake vs fry

bake

= dry heat.

fry

= cook in hot oil/fat.

> baked doughnut

> = 焗製甜甜圈

> fried doughnut

> = 油炸甜甜圈

Different cooking method.

Important distinction: baked vs freshly baked

baked

= cooked by baking.

freshly baked

= only recently baked, still fresh.

> baked bread

> = 烘焙過的麵包

> freshly baked bread

> = 新鮮出爐麵包

In your passage, freshly baked adds the important idea of immediacy and aroma.

Important distinction: baked vs raw raw = uncooked.

baked

= cooked by dry heat.

> raw dough

> = 生麵糰

> baked bread

> = 烤好的麵包

Important distinction: bake vs rise

You just curated rise.

rise

= dough expands because of fermentation/leavening.

bake

= dough is cooked by oven heat.

Sequence:

> dough rises → dough is baked → bread forms

So:

* rise = 發酵膨脹

* bake = 烘焙烤熟

Important distinction: baker vs bakery

baker

= person

bakery

= shop/business/place

> baker

> = 麵包師 / 烘焙師

> bakery

> = 麵包店 / 烘焙店

Important distinction: bakery vs café

bakery

focuses on producing/selling baked goods.

café

focuses on drinks/light meals and a sit-down environment.

A business can be both.

Important distinction: baked — food vs baked — heat

Food:

> “freshly baked bread”

= 新鮮出爐麵包

Heat:

> “We were baking in the sun.”

= 我們在陽光下熱得像被烤一樣

Same metaphor, different domain.

Important distinction: baked — food vs slang

Food:

> “baked potato”

= 焗薯

Slang:

> “He was baked.”

= 他嗑了大麻、神智恍惚

Excellent MCQ contrast.

Family-extension sweep

After the full audit, the useful modern family includes:

* bake — food = 烘焙 / 焗 / 烤

* baked — food = 烘焙的 / 烤熟的

* baking — activity = 烘焙

* bake — material = 烘硬 / 燒製

* bake — heat = 被曬得很熱 / 熱得發燙
