

Absolutely — celebrity is a useful polysemy/family target because your passage uses it here:

> “social media can turn an ordinary student into a minor celebrity overnight”

Here celebrity means a person who becomes publicly known and recognised by many people, even if only briefly or within a limited context.

Word family: celebrity / celebrities / celebrated / celebrate / celebration

Base noun: celebrity

Plural: celebrities

Related adjective: celebrated

Related verb: celebrate

Related noun: celebration

Part of speech: noun (名詞)

Major domains: fame, entertainment, media, social media, public recognition, figurative/local fame, celebrity culture, endorsement, journalism

Meaning in your passage: celebrity = publicly known person — 名人 ; 知名人物

Your sentence:

> “social media can turn an ordinary student into a minor celebrity overnight”

Here celebrity means:

> a person who becomes recognised by a relatively large number of people because of public/media attention.

繁體中文 :

因媒體、網絡或公眾關注而被很多人認識的人 ; 名人 / 知名人物

The phrase minor celebrity specifically means:

> someone who is somewhat well known, but not a major or internationally famous star

Natural translation:

> 「社交媒體可以在一夜之間把一個普通學生變成一個小有名氣的人 / 小名人。」

So here:

> celebrity = 因突然爆紅而受到大量陌生人認識和注意的人

AF. CELEBRITY AS FAME ITSELF

33. celebrity = fame/renown — 名聲；知名度

More formal/literary.

Practice 61

> “The book brought him sudden celebrity.”

「這本書為他帶來突然的名聲。」

Practice 62

> “She achieved celebrity through her writing.”

「她透過寫作獲得了知名度。」

This sense is much less common in everyday speech than:

> celebrity = famous person

but it is important.

AG. CELEBRITY AS “FAMOUSNESS” VS FAME

34. celebrity vs fame

fame

= state of being widely known.

celebrity

can mean:

1. a famous person
2. the state/status of being famous

So:

> “She achieved fame.”

> = 她成名。

> “She achieved celebrity.”

> = 她取得名人地位 / 成名。

But fame is much more natural for the abstract state in ordinary English.

AH. CELEBRITY VS RENOWN

35. celebrity vs renown

celebrity

often tied to:

- * media visibility
- * popular recognition
- * public personality

renown

= respected fame, usually for achievement.

> celebrity

> = 名人知名度

> renown

> = 聲望 / 盛名

Someone may have great scholarly renown without being a celebrity.

AI. CELEBRITY VS NOTORIETY

36. celebrity vs notoriety

celebrity

= fame, often neutral or positive.

notoriety

= fame for something bad.

> celebrity

> = 名人身份

> notoriety

> = 惡名 / 臭名昭著

A person can become notorious without becoming a conventional celebrity.

AJ. CELEBRITY VS PUBLIC FIGURE

37. celebrity vs public figure

celebrity

= person famous because of public/media attention.

public figure

= person with significant public role/visibility.

A public figure may be:

- * politician
- * executive
- * activist
- * official

without being a celebrity in the entertainment sense.

AK. CELEBRITY VS PERSONALITY

38. celebrity vs personality

In media language:

celebrity

= famous person generally.

personality

can mean:

= well-known media figure, especially broadcaster/TV personality.

> television personality

> = 電視名人 / 主持人

This is narrower in some contexts.

AL. CELEBRITY VS ICON

39. celebrity vs icon

celebrity

= famous person.

icon

= highly symbolic, influential or culturally significant figure.

Not every celebrity is an icon.

AM. CELEBRITY VS SUPERSTAR

40. celebrity vs superstar

celebrity

= broad category of famous person.

superstar

= extremely famous and highly successful star.

Scale roughly:

> minor celebrity → celebrity → superstar

This is only a rough fame-scale, not a strict taxonomy.

AN. CELEBRITY VS A-LISTER

41. A-list celebrity = 頂級名人；一線明星

Practice 63

Usually playful/figurative.

BK. CELEBRITY AS ATTRIBUTIVE NOUN

66. celebrity + noun = 名人相關的 / 由名人參與的

Examples:

- * celebrity guest
- * celebrity chef
- * celebrity interview
- * celebrity endorsement
- * celebrity culture

Here celebrity functions attributively before another noun.

It does not become an adjective grammatically in the strictest sense; it is a noun used as a modifier.

BL. CELEBRITY VS FAMOUS

67. celebrity vs famous famous

= adjective describing being widely known.

celebrity

= noun naming a famous person, or more formally the state of fame.

> “She is famous.”

> = 她很有名。

> “She is a celebrity.”

> = 她是一名名人。

You cannot usually say:

> She is celebrity. ❌

You need:

> a celebrity.

BM. CELEBRITY VS CELEBRATED

68. celebrity vs celebrated

celebrity

= famous person.

celebrated

= famous and admired for achievement.

> celebrity chef

> = 名人廚師 > celebrated chef

> = 著名且備受推崇的廚師

Celebrated often implies respect/admiration, not mere public recognition.

BN. CELEBRATED

69. celebrated = famous and highly respected — 著名而備受讚譽的

Practice 113

> “She is a celebrated author.”

「她是一位*著名而備受推崇的作家*。」

Practice 114

> “The restaurant was founded by a celebrated chef.”

「這間餐廳由一位*備受讚譽的名廚*創辦。」 celebrated ≠ celebrity

A celebrated scientist may be highly respected without being a pop-culture celebrity.

BO. CELEBRITY VS CELEBRATE

70. celebrate = 慶祝；頌揚

This is etymologically related but semantically distinct.

Practice 115

> “They celebrated the success.”

「他們慶祝成功。」

Practice 116

> “The exhibition celebrates local creativity.”

「展覽歌頌 / 展現本地創意。」

Important:

> celebrity does not mean “celebration”.

BP. CELEBRATE = HONOUR / PRAISE PUBLICLY

71. celebrate someone/something = 頌揚；讚頌；肯定

Practice 117

> “The documentary celebrates young creators.”

「這部紀錄片頌揚 / 肯定年輕創作者。」

Practice 118

> “The festival celebrates cultural diversity.”

「這個節慶頌揚文化多樣性。」

This provides the semantic bridge to:

> celebrated = widely praised.

BQ. CELEBRATION

72. celebration = 慶祝活動；慶典

Practice 119

> “They held a celebration after the result.”

「結果公布後，他們舉行了慶祝活動。」

Practice 120

> “The festival is a celebration of local culture.”

「這個節慶是對本地文化的一場頌揚 / 慶典。」

Again:

> celebration ≠ celebrity

but belongs to the historical family.

BR. CELEBRITY VS CELEBRATION — MORPHOLOGY TRAP

celebrity

= 名人 / 名人地位

celebration

= 慶祝 / 慶祝活動

celebrate

= 慶祝 / 頌揚

celebrated

= 著名而備受推崇的

These forms are related historically but have diverged strongly.

BS. CELEBRITY VS INFLUENCE

celebrity

= public recognition.

influence

= ability to affect opinions/actions.

A celebrity may have influence, but fame itself does not guarantee persuasion.

BT. CELEBRITY VS VISIBILITY

You already curated visibility.

visibility

= degree of being seen/noticed.

celebrity

= status/person resulting from substantial public recognition.

A person can have:

> increased visibility

without becoming:

> a celebrity.

BU. CELEBRITY VS POPULARITY

popularity

= degree to which people like/support someone.

celebrity

= fame/recognition.

A controversial person can be a celebrity without being widely liked.

So:

> celebrity ≠ popularity

Very important passage-related distinction.

BV. CELEBRITY VS RECOGNITION

recognition

= being acknowledged/noticed.

celebrity

= sustained or notable public recognition forming a public identity.

Recognition can be much smaller in scale.

BW. CELEBRITY VS VIRALITY

You already curated viral.

virality

= rapid spread of content.

celebrity

= fame/status of the person.

A video can go viral without its creator becoming a lasting celebrity.

This is exactly what your passage suggests.

BX. CELEBRITY VS FAME

Your passage distinguishes them subtly:

> social media can turn someone into a minor celebrity overnight

but later:

> “famous” for a day

This suggests:

- * quick public recognition
- * temporary fame
- * not necessarily lasting celebrity status

BY. CELEBRITY VS INFLUENCER — SOCIAL MEDIA NUANCE

A social-media personality may be:

famous mainly because they are known

→ celebrity

influential because followers act on recommendations

→ influencer both

→ celebrity influencer

Do not automatically translate every influencer as:

> 名人

BZ. CELEBRITY VS CREATOR

creator

= person who produces content.

celebrity

= person widely recognised.

Your passage writer begins as:

> creator/student and temporarily becomes:

> minor celebrity.

That distinction is central.

CA. CELEBRITY VS PUBLICITY

publicity

= media/public attention.

celebrity

= person/status produced by fame.

Publicity can create celebrity.

CB. CELEBRITY VS PROFILE

profile

= level of public visibility.

celebrity

= recognised public identity.

> high profile

> does not necessarily mean

> celebrity

though they overlap.

CC. CELEBRITY VS REPUTATION

reputation

= what people believe about your character/quality.

celebrity

= degree/status of fame.

A person can have:

- * high celebrity
- * poor reputation

or:

- * excellent reputation
- * little celebrity.

CD. CELEBRITY VS PRESTIGE

prestige

= respect/status.

celebrity

= fame.

Fame does not automatically imply prestige.

This is a particularly important distinction.

CE. CELEBRITY VS AUTHORITY

authority

= expertise or legitimate power.

celebrity

= fame.

A celebrity is not automatically an authority on unrelated topics.

CF. CELEBRITY VS ROLE MODEL role model

= person whose behaviour others may imitate.

celebrity

= famous person.

A celebrity may become a role model, but the concepts are separate.

CG. CELEBRITY VS IDOL

idol

= person intensely admired by fans.

celebrity

= famous person.

Someone can be a celebrity without being anyone's idol.

CH. CELEBRITY VS HERO

hero

= person admired for courage/achievement.

celebrity

= person famous publicly.

Again:

> admiration ≠ fame.

CI. CELEBRITY VS HOUSEHOLD NAME

73. household name = 家喻戶曉的人 / 品牌

Practice 121

> “The actor became a household name.”

「這位演員變得家喻戶曉。」

Practice 122

> “A minor celebrity is not necessarily a household name.”

「一個小有名氣的人不一定家喻戶曉。」

household name implies much broader recognition than minor celebrity.

CJ. CELEBRITY VS ONE-HIT WONDER

74. one-hit wonder = 靠一次成功成名、之後未能延續的人 / 作品

Practice 123

> “He feared becoming a one-hit wonder.”

「他害怕自己只是靠一次成功走紅、之後無以為繼的人。」

Practice 124

> “One viral post does not necessarily create a lasting career.”

「一篇爆紅貼文未必能帶來長久事業。」

This term is not a synonym for celebrity, but highly relevant to temporary fame.

CK. CELEBRITY IN YOUR PASSAGE

The passage says:

> “In an age when social media can turn an ordinary student into a minor celebrity overnight, many young people dream of going viral.”

The exact meaning is:

celebrity = 因為影片突然在網上爆紅，作者可能在極短時間內被大量陌生人認識、注意和討論，因此暫時取得一定名氣。

The word minor is crucial.

It tells us:

> this is not full-scale superstar fame.

It means:

> limited but noticeable public recognition

Natural translation:

> 「在這個社交媒體可以一夜之間把普通學生變成小名人的時代，很多年輕人都夢想一夜爆紅。」
