

Absolutely — claim is an excellent Tier 1 polysemy target because your passage uses it here:

> “...while another claimed the video was ‘cringe’.”

Here claim means to state that something is true, especially when that statement may be disputed or not yet proven. But the word also has major meanings in legal rights, insurance, ownership, demands, achievements, and responsibility.

Word family: claim / claimant

Base word: claim

Part of speech: verb (動詞) / noun (名詞)

Related noun: claimant

Meaning in your passage: claim = say/assert something is true — 聲稱 ; 宣稱

Your sentence:

> “another claimed the video was ‘cringe’.”

Here claimed means:

> said or asserted that the video was embarrassing/cringeworthy, without implying that the statement was objectively proven.

繁體中文 :

提出某個說法，表示自己認為某件事是真的，但這個說法未必已被證實或得到所有人同意

Natural translation:

> “another claimed the video was ‘cringe’”

「另一個人則聲稱這段影片很『尷尬 / 令人起雞皮』。」

So here:

> claim = 聲稱某事為真

> “Each claimant was interviewed separately.”

「每位申索人都分別接受訪問。」 claimant = 正式提出索償、福利申請或法律權利要求的人

Register:

- * legal
- * insurance
- * administrative

Important distinction: claim vs say say neutral:

= 說某件事。

claim

= state something as true, often where:

- * evidence may be needed;
- * the statement is disputed;
- * the speaker's reliability is not assumed.

Compare:

> “He said he was tired.”

> = 他說自己累。

> “He claimed he was innocent.”

> = 他聲稱自己無罪。

Claim creates more distance from the truth of the statement.

Important distinction: claim does NOT automatically mean “lie”

This is crucial.

> “She claimed that she saw him.”

means:

> 她聲稱自己見過他。

It does not automatically mean:

> 她在說謊。

It means the writer/speaker is not independently confirming the truth.

Excellent MCQ nuance.

Important distinction: claim vs argue

claim

= put forward a statement as true.

= give reasons supporting a position.

> “The author claims that social media is harmful.”

= 作者提出「社交媒體有害」這個主張。

> “The author argues that social media is harmful because...”

= 作者提出理由論證社交媒體有害。

A claim may be part of an argument.

Important distinction: claim vs allege

claim

neutral-to-sceptical and very broad.

allege especially:

= claim wrongdoing without proof yet.

> claim he was there

> = 聲稱他當時在場

> allege that he committed fraud

> = 指稱他涉嫌欺詐

Allege has a stronger legal/accusatory flavour.

Important distinction: claim vs insist

claim

= state as true.

insist

= state firmly/repeatedly despite disagreement.

> claim innocence

> = 聲稱無罪

> insist on innocence

> = 堅稱自己無罪

Insist emphasizes firmness, not evidential uncertainty.

Important distinction: claim vs demand

claim

= ask for something because you believe you are entitled to it.

demand

= strongly require something.

> claim a refund

> = 根據權利申領退款

> demand a refund

> = 強烈要求退款

So claim has an entitlement/right dimension.

Important distinction: claim vs collect

claim

= establish your right to receive something.

collect

= physically receive/pick it up.

> claim a prize

> = 確認資格並領取獎品 > collect a parcel

> = 去取包裹

Sometimes both happen together.

Important distinction: claim vs own own

= actually possess legally.

claim ownership

= state that the ownership belongs to you.

Someone can:

> claim ownership

without actually proving:

> ownership

Important legal distinction.

Important distinction: claim — statement vs insurance

Statement:

> “He claimed the video was fake.”

= 他聲稱影片是假的。

Insurance:

> “He made a claim after the accident.”

= 他事故後提出保險索償。

Completely different domains.

Excellent MCQ contrast.

Important distinction: claim — obtain vs state

Obtain:

> “She claimed the prize.”

= 她領取 / 贏得獎品。

State:

> “She claimed the prize was unfair.”

= 她聲稱獎品安排不公平。

Same verb, very different grammar.

Important distinction: claim a title vs claim to a title claim a title often:

= win/secure the title

> “She claimed the championship.”

= 她奪得冠軍。 claim to a title

= assert a right to hold the title

> “He has a claim to the throne.”

= 他有王位繼承權主張。

Subtle but high-value distinction.

Important distinction: claim lives

> “The accident claimed three lives.”

does not mean:

> three people requested their lives.

It is a journalistic metaphor meaning:

> 導致三人死亡 / 奪去三條人命

Strong MCQ trap.

Important distinction: claim victory

As noted, this can be ambiguous:

Outcome:

> “The team claimed victory.”

= 球隊取得勝利。

Assertion:

> “He claimed victory before the result was official.”

= 正式結果公布前，他已宣稱勝利。

Context is essential.

Important distinction: claim in your passage

Your sentence:

> “another claimed the video was ‘cringe’.”

Here claim is not:

- * an insurance claim,
- * a legal right,
- * collecting a prize,
- * taking responsibility.

It means:

> a stranger stated an opinion/assertion as if it were true

Natural Chinese:

> 聲稱 / 說

Because the writer does not endorse that judgement as objective fact.

Family-extension sweep

After the full audit, the useful modern inventory includes:

* claim — assertion verb = 聲稱 / 宣稱

* claim that = 聲稱.....

* claim to do = 聲稱自己.....

* claim — assertion noun = 說法 / 主張
 * make a claim = 提出主張 * claim — entitlement = 申領 / 索取
 * claim — insurance noun = 索償 / 申請 * insurance claim = 保險索償 * claim compensation = 索償
 * claim benefits = 申領福利
 * claim ownership/right = 主張所有權 / 權利 * claim to something = 對.....的權利主張
 * lay claim to = 聲稱擁有 / 主張權利 * claim — collect = 認領 / 領取 * claim — win = 奪得 / 取得 * claim victory = 取得勝利 / 宣稱勝利 * claim lives = 奪去生命 * claim responsibility = 聲稱 / 承認負責 * claim credit = 邀功 / 聲稱功勞屬於自己
 * claimant = 申索人 / 權利主張者
