

Absolutely — comment is a strong Tier 2 word that becomes much richer once we do the full family and domain sweep.

Your passage uses it several times:

> “expecting nothing more than a few amused comments from friends.”

> “Comments came from people I had never met...”

> “A second lesson came from reading the comments.”

Here comment means a written response posted by another user beneath or in response to online content. But comment also has major meanings involving remarks, opinions, criticism, formal commentary, annotations, programming code, editorial notes, public statements, and fixed expressions such as no comment.

Word family: comment / commentary / commentator

Base word: comment

Part of speech: noun (名詞) / verb (動詞)

Related noun: commentary

Related person noun: commentator

Major domains: everyday speech, social media, journalism, public statements, academic writing, editing, computing, broadcasting, sport

Meaning in your passage: comment = written response to online content — 留言 ; 評論

Your sentence:

> “Comments came from people I had never met...”

Here comments means:

> written messages or reactions that users posted in response to the video.

繁體中文 :

網民在影片下面或針對影片發表的文字回應、意見或反應 ; 留言 / 評論

Natural translation:

> “Comments came from people I had never met...”

「一些我從未見過的人也留下了留言 / 評論。」

So here:

> comment = 社交媒體使用者針對貼文、影片等留下的書面回應

AI. IMPORTANT DISTINCTIONS

comment vs remark

remark

= something said, usually brief.

comment

= remark that specifically expresses an observation/opinion about something.

> “Nice weather.”

> may simply be a remark.

> “The design is too complicated.”

> is clearly a comment on the design.

So comment has stronger evaluative/reference-to-topic meaning.

comment vs opinion

opinion

= belief/view held by a person.

comment

= expression of that view in speech/writing.

You can:

> have an opinion

without:

> making a comment.

comment vs statement

statement

= anything stated, often formal/factual.

comment

= usually a reaction, observation, or opinion about something.

> official statement

> = 官方聲明

> official comment

> = 官方回應 / 評論

comment vs response

response

= any reaction/answer.

comment

= verbal/written evaluative reaction.

A response could be:

* action

* silence

* facial expression

A comment is linguistic.

comment vs reply

comment

= initial written reaction to content.

reply

= response to another comment/message.

On social platforms:

> post → comment → reply

Useful structural distinction.

comment vs post

You already curated post.

post

= main item published.

comment

= reaction attached to that item.

> post the video

> = 發布影片

> comment on the video

> = 在影片下留言

Excellent passage-specific contrast.

comment vs review

comment

= usually brief remark/opinion.

review

= more structured evaluation of a product, service, film, book, etc.

> “Great coffee!”

> = comment

> detailed 4-star evaluation of the café

> = review

They overlap online, but not identical.

comment vs feedback

feedback

= information intended to help assess/improve performance.

comment

= any remark, whether useful or not.

> teacher feedback

> = 教師回饋

> teacher comment

> = 一句評語

A comment may be part of feedback.

comment vs criticism

comment

= neutral umbrella term.

criticism

= specifically negative/evaluative, unless in academic/artistic sense.

> positive comment

> possible

> positive criticism

> usually requires special context such as constructive criticism

So comment is broader.

comment vs commentary

This is crucial.

comment

= one individual remark/opinion.

commentary

= extended or continuous description/analysis.

> one comment about the match

> = 一句評論

> live match commentary

> = 整場比賽的現場評述

Do not use them interchangeably.

commentary vs narration narration

= tells what is happening/a story.

commentary

= describes and often analyses/evaluates.

Sports:

> commentator does more than simply narrate.

commentator vs commenter

This is an excellent family distinction.

commenter

= person who leaves a comment, especially online.

commentator

= person who professionally or publicly provides commentary/analysis.

> social-media commenter

> = 留言者

> football commentator

> = 足球評述員

Very important.

commenter = 留言者 / 評論者

A useful modern derivative worth adding.

Practice 137

> “One commenter criticised the video.”

「一名留言者批評了那段影片。」

Practice 138

> “Several commenters defended the creator.”

「幾名留言者替創作者辯護。」 commenter = 發表留言 / 評論的人，尤其網絡使用者

commentator vs critic

commentator

= analyses/discusses events/issues publicly.

critic

= evaluates and may judge quality or oppose something.

> sports commentator

> = 體育評述員

> film critic

> = 電影評論家

comment vs annotation

annotation

= explanatory note attached to text/data, often scholarly/technical.

comment

= broader and often collaborative/editorial.

> document comment

> = 文件批註

> scholarly annotation

> = 學術註釋 comment vs note

note

= brief written record/reminder/explanation.

comment

= remark specifically reacting to/evaluating something.

In document software they may overlap functionally.

comment — social media vs programming

Social:

> “She posted a comment.”

= 她發了一則留言。

Programming:

> “Add a comment to the code.”

= 在程式碼中加入註解。

Same noun, radically different purpose.

Excellent MCQ contrast.

comment out — key technical trap

> “Comment out this line.”

does not mean:

> 對這行程式碼寫評論。

It means:

> 把它變成註解，使程式暫時不執行這行。 **

no comment vs no comments

No comment. **

= 我拒絕評論 / 無可奉告。

There are no comments.

= 沒有人留言。

Very different.

Excellent MCQ trap.

comment on vs comment about

Both are possible.

comment on more standard/formal:

> comment on the report

comment about

common in more conversational contexts:

> make a comment about his clothes

With the verb, comment on is usually the safest standard pattern.

comment vs commentate

There is also:

commentate

= provide spoken commentary, especially sport/broadcasting.

Example:

> “She commentates on football matches.”

「她擔任足球賽事評述員 / 講評。」

This verb is especially BrE and less common than:

> provide commentary or:

> commentate on

It is useful but secondary.

commentate on + event = 為.....作實況評述

Practice 139

> “He commentates on international football.”

「他負責國際足球賽事的評述。」

Practice 140

> “She was invited to commentate on the final.”

「她獲邀為決賽作現場評述。」

comment in your passage

The passage uses comments in several subtly different shades:

> “a few amused comments from friends”

Here:

> light-hearted reactions / remarks

「朋友一些覺得好笑的留言」

Then:

> “Comments came from people I had never met...”

Here:

> online responses from strangers

「陌生網民的留言」

Then:

> “A second lesson came from reading the comments.”

Here:

> the whole online comment section / body of responses

「閱讀留言區內的評論」

So the lexical sense remains essentially the same, but the discourse scope shifts from:

* individual comments

to

* the collective stream of online responses.

Family-extension sweep
