Important distinction 1: committed vs dedicated

Very relevant to your passage.

committed

has made a strong decision to stay involved and fulfil responsibilities.

dedicated strongly devoted and willing to work hard.

They overlap heavily:

> committed employee

> 投入而有承擔的員工 > dedicated employee

> 非常敬業、全心投入的員工

Committed often emphasizes obligation and sustained involvement slightly more.

Important distinction 2: committed vs motivated motivated has desire or reason to act.

committed

has decided to remain dedicated to the goal.

You can feel motivated temporarily without being deeply committed.

Important distinction 3: committed vs responsible

committed

willing to devote yourself to something.

responsible handles duties properly and considers consequences.

A team member can be responsible in individual work but not deeply committed to the group's wider goals.

Important distinction 4: commit vs promise

promise

say that you will do something.

commit

often goes further: bind yourself to sustained action, a goal, or resources.

> promise to help > 答應幫忙

> commit to the project > 承諾並投入項目

Important distinction 5: commit vs devote

commit

make a firm decision to allocate yourself/resources.

devote give a large amount of time, energy, attention, etc.

> commit resources to research > 承諾投入資源 > devote years to research > 多年投身研究

Important distinction 6: commit to + noun / -ing

Correct:

> commit to the project
> commit to improving communication

Here to is a preposition.

So:

> commit to improve communication ⚠ is less standard in this pattern than:

> commit to improving communication ✅

Important distinction 7: commit a crime vs commit to a goal

Completely different structures:

commit + crime/offence

= 犯下 > commit a crime

commit to + goal/action

= 承諾 / 投入

> commit to teamwork

The preposition changes the sense dramatically.

Important distinction 8: commit resources vs spend resources spend actually use them.

commit

formally reserve or promise them for a purpose.

A company may commit £1 million today but spend it gradually over several years.

Important distinction 9: commit something to memory

This does not mean:

> promise your memory something.

It is a fixed expression meaning:

刻意牢記

Important distinction 10: committed employee vs employee with commitments

committed employee

投入工作的員工 employee with commitments

有其他責任 / 既定安排的員工

Very different meanings from the same family.

Important distinction 11: commitment = promise vs dedication

Promise:

- > make a commitment to reduce costs
- > 作出降低成本的承諾

Dedication:

- > her commitment to the team
- > 她對團隊的投入

The first is an undertaking; the second is an attitude/degree of devotion.

Important distinction 12: commitment = dedication vs appointment/obligation

Compare:

- > His commitment to teaching is impressive.
- > 他對教學的*投入*令人佩服。
- > He can't come because of a family commitment.
- > 他因家庭上的*安排 / 責任*不能來。

Same noun, very different contextual meaning.

Important distinction 13: financial commitment vs payment payment

one actual transfer of money.

financial commitment

the obligation to pay, often over time.

A mortgage is a long-term financial commitment involving many payments.

Important distinction 14: commit in computing

In version control:

> commit changes

means:

把一組修改正式記錄成版本歷史的一部分

It is not the same as simply:

- * saving a file,
- * uploading,
- * pushing.

A commit creates a recorded revision; a later push may send commits to a remote repository.

Important distinction 15: commit in database systems

commit

make a transaction's changes permanent.

Its common counterpart is:

rollback

cancel/reverse the uncommitted transaction changes.

This is a strongly established technical sense.

Important distinction 16: less committed in your passage

This does not necessarily mean those colleagues have made an explicit promise and broken it.

It means:

they show less dedication, involvement, and willingness to put sustained effort into the group work

So the passage contrasts:

- > diligent workers
- > with
- > less committed colleagues

not necessarily:

- > skilled workers
- > with
- > unskilled workers.

Family-extension note

The commit family has several genuinely distinct modern branches:

1. dedication / undertaking

- * commit to teamwork
- * committed employee
- * commitment to a goal

2. allocate resources

- * commit money
- * commit staff

3. wrongdoing

- * commit a crime
- * commit an offence

4. formal transfer into a state

- * commit to memory
- * commit to writing
- * commit someone to an institution

5. computing

- * commit code
- * commit a transaction
- * a commit

6. promise

- * make a commitment
- * honour a commitment

7. dedication

- * strong commitment to the team

8. existing obligation

- * work commitments
- * prior commitment

9. financial/resource obligation

- * financial commitment

For your passage, the exact branch is:

committed = seriously dedicated to doing one's share of the team's work

For your original sentence

> When diligent workers realise that their performance is being tied to colleagues who are less committed, motivation begins to decline.

Here:

*less committed = 那些同事對共同工作沒有投入同樣程度的時間、努力和責任感，也沒有那麼認真地把團隊目標視為自己的責任

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 當勤奮的員工意識到自己的表現竟然與那些*投入程度較低、沒那麼認真負責的同事*掛鉤時，他們的動力便開始下降。

The cleanest contrast is:

> motivated = 有動力去做 > dedicated = 很投入、很敬業 > responsible = 妥善履行責任 > committed = 已把自己投入某個目標，並願意持續付出和承擔

For this passage, less committed therefore means less dedicated to carrying their fair share of the team's work, not simply “less enthusiastic.”
