AZ. IMPORTANT DISTINCTIONS

dependence vs reliance

dependence

= stronger state of needing support/resources.

reliance

= act/state of depending on something, often more neutral.

Compare:

> reliance on public transport

> = 對公共交通的依靠

> dependence on social-media approval

> = 對社交媒體認同形成較強依賴

Dependence can sound stronger or less voluntary.

dependence vs dependency

dependence

more natural for broad states:

- * emotional dependence
- * drug dependence
- * dependence on imports

dependency

especially useful for countable/system relations:

- * software dependency
- * task dependency
- * external dependency

Compare:

> “dependence on one supplier”
> = 整體依賴狀態

> “three critical dependencies” > = 三個具體依賴項

dependence vs addiction

dependence

= reliance.

addiction

= compulsive engagement with impaired control and harmful continuation.

In your passage:

> enjoyment → dependence

means:

> enjoyment became reliance

It does not automatically mean a clinical addiction diagnosis.

dependence vs habit

habit

= regularly repeated behaviour.

dependence

= feeling/being unable to function comfortably without something.

> checking every morning

> could simply be a habit.

> feeling anxious unless you check

> may suggest dependence.

dependence vs compulsion

compulsion

= powerful urge to perform an act, often experienced as difficult to resist.

dependence

= broader reliance on the activity/substance/person.

Compulsive checking can be one sign of dependence, but the terms are not identical.

dependence vs need

need

= requirement.

dependence

= continuing state of relying on something to meet needs.

> need electricity

> vs

> dependence on electricity

The second emphasizes a structural ongoing relationship.

dependence vs vulnerability

You already curated vulnerability.

dependence

= you need something.

vulnerability

= because of your situation, you can be more easily harmed.

Dependence can create vulnerability:

> dependence on one supplier

> → vulnerability if that supplier fails.

Very useful conceptual relationship.

dependence vs attachment

attachment

= emotional bond.

dependence

= need/reliance.

You can be emotionally attached to someone without being dependent on them.

dependence vs codependence

dependence

= one side relies on another.

codependence

= unhealthy relationship pattern involving excessive mutual or role-based reliance.

Not interchangeable.

dependent vs needy

dependent

= objectively/reliantly needing support.

needy

= often evaluative; requiring excessive emotional attention/support.

> dependent child

> = neutral

> needy partner

> = often negative

Important register distinction.

dependent vs subordinate

dependent

= relies on another.

subordinate

= lower in rank/authority.

Something can be dependent without being formally subordinate.

dependent vs independent

dependent

= relies on another person/system/factor.

independent

= can function without that reliance, or is free from control.

Examples:

> dependent child

> vs

> independent adult

> dependent variable

> vs

> independent variable

Same contrast across multiple domains.

dependent vs dependable

This is a classic trap.

dependent

= 依賴的

dependable

= 可靠的

> dependent on parents

> = 依賴父母

> dependable employee

> = 可靠員工

Completely different.

depend on = rely on vs be determined by

Two major meanings:

Reliance:

> “The child depends on her parents.”

= 孩子依靠父母。

Determination:

> “The price depends on demand.”

= 價格取決於需求。

Same construction, different semantic relationship.

Excellent MCQ contrast.

it depends

> “It depends.”

does not mean:

> 它依靠某物。

It means:

> 沒有固定答案，要視乎其他條件。 **

Natural Chinese:

> 「要看情況。」

> 「視乎情況而定。」

depend on someone vs count on someone depend on someone

= need or trust their support.

count on someone

= trust them to do what is expected.

> “I depend on my parents financially.”

> = 我經濟上依賴父母。

> “I count on Amy to arrive on time.”

> = 我相信 Amy 會準時到。

Overlap exists in trust contexts.

depend on vs rely on

Often interchangeable:

> depend on technology

> rely on technology

But:

> “It depends on the weather.”

cannot normally become:

> “It relies on the weather.”

because here depend means:

> result is determined by.

dependent on vs addicted to dependent on = broad reliance.

addicted to = stronger, usually compulsive/addictive relationship.

> dependent on technology

> = can be structurally necessary

> addicted to technology > = usually behavioural/psychological problem

financial dependence vs financial support

financial support

= money/help received.

financial dependence

= state of needing that money/help.

The support is what is provided; dependence is the relationship created.

independence vs self-sufficiency

independence

= freedom from reliance/control.

self-sufficiency

= ability to provide all/most necessities oneself.

You may be politically independent without being economically self-sufficient.

independence vs autonomy

independence

= not dependent.

autonomy

= freedom/power to make one's own decisions.

A person can depend financially on others but still have substantial autonomy.

interdependence vs dependence

dependence

often one-directional:

> A depends on B.

interdependence

mutual:

> A and B depend on each other.

Very important distinction.

dependent variable vs correlated variable

dependent variable

= variable designated as the outcome being explained/measured.

correlated variables

= variables statistically associated.

A dependent variable is a role in the model/experiment, not merely any correlated variable.

statistical dependence vs causation

Two variables can be statistically dependent without one causing the other.

So:

> dependence $\neq$ causation

A critical research distinction.

software dependency vs software requirement

dependency

= another component/package the software requires.

requirement

= broader condition the software/system must satisfy.

A required library is a dependency; “must support 1,000 users” is a requirement.

dependency vs prerequisite

dependency

= one task/component relies on another.

prerequisite

= something that must be completed/present first.

They often overlap in project contexts, but dependency relationships can be broader.

path dependence vs ordinary dependence

Ordinary:

> system currently relies on X.

path dependence

= previous historical choices constrain the options available now.

So:

> path dependence is about history shaping future possibilities.

dependence in your passage

The source says:

> “What surprised me most was how quickly enjoyment turned into dependence. The more attention I received, the more I wanted.”

The following sentence defines the sense very clearly.

The sequence is:

> enjoyment → repeated checking → more attention → wanting still more → dependence

So dependence here means:

> a psychological and behavioural reliance on receiving social-media attention and checking metrics, rather than simply enjoying social media casually.

The passage then intensifies that idea:

> “A single successful post, rather than making me satisfied, made me anxious about whether I could repeat that success.”

So the dependence involves:

- * attention
- * numbers
- * positive feedback
- * repeated checking
- * desire to reproduce success
