Key contrasts

20. journal vs diary

diary

= personal record of daily events, often strongly chronological

日記

journal

= can be personal too, but often allows more reflection, ideas, observations, or thematic writing

日記；札記；日誌

In everyday use they overlap heavily.

A useful distinction is:

> diary

> → what happened today

> journal

> → what happened + what I thought/learned/felt

But this is a tendency, not a strict rule.

21. journal vs notebook

notebook

= book of blank/lined pages used for notes

筆記本

journal

= record written in such a book

日記 / 日誌

A notebook is the physical object; a journal is defined more by its purpose/content.

23. journal vs article

journal

= publication containing multiple articles

期刊

article

= one individual piece within that publication

文章 ; 論文

Compare:

> published in a journal

> 發表在期刊上

> wrote an article

> 寫了一篇文章

24. journal vs magazine

magazine

= periodical aimed broadly at general or specialist readers, often less research-focused

雜誌

academic journal

= scholarly publication, often research-based and peer-reviewed

學術期刊

25. journal vs newspaper

newspaper

= publication focused mainly on current news

報紙

journal

= can mean a periodical generally, but today often suggests academic/professional publication or appears in publication names.
