

Word family: journey / journeys / journeyed / journeying

Base word: journey

Plural: journeys

Verb forms: journeyed, journeying

Part of speech: noun (名詞) / verb (動詞)

Your sentence:

> “It carries the mood of that journey with it.”

Meaning in this passage

Here, journey means the trip/travel experience the speaker had in Seoul, especially the experience of going somewhere away from home.

繁體中文： 旅程；旅行過程；從一個地方前往另一個地方以及途中經歷的一段旅行

中文翻譯：

> “It carries the mood of that journey with it.”

「它把那趟旅程 / 旅行的氣氛也一起保留下來了。」

Here:

that journey = 那一次去首爾旅行的整段旅程與經歷

1. journey = travel from one place to another (旅行) — 旅程；行程

This is the meaning used in your passage.

Meaning: An act of travelling from one place to another, especially when the travel takes some time or distance.

Practice 1 — Original

> “The jacket carries the mood of that journey with it.”

「這件外套承載着那趟旅程的氣氛。」

Practice 2

> “The train journey took three hours.”

「那段火車旅程花了三個小時。」

Practice 3

> “We began our journey early in the morning.”

「我們一大早就開始了旅程。」 journey = 從一個地方前往另一個地方的一段旅行過程

Common:

- * long journey
- * train journey
- * return journey
- * journey home
- * begin a journey
- * complete a journey

2. journey = the travelling experience, not merely the destination (旅行經歷) — 旅途；旅行歷程

Journey often emphasizes the experience and process of travelling rather than simply the fact that someone went somewhere.

Practice 4

> “The journey through the mountains was unforgettable.”

「穿越山區的那段旅途令人難忘。」

Practice 5

> “We met many interesting people during the journey.”

「我們在旅途中遇到了很多有趣的人。」 journey = 旅途中經歷的整個過程，包括沿途發生的事情

For strict semantic counting, this belongs under Meaning 1. It is a contextual emphasis rather than a genuinely separate meaning.

Your passage uses journey in exactly this richer sense: not simply transportation, but the memory and feeling of the Seoul trip.

3. journey = gradual process of personal change/development (比喻) — 歷程 ; 成長過程

This is the major figurative meaning.

Meaning: A long process in which someone changes, learns, develops, recovers, or moves toward a goal.

Practice 6

> “Learning to accept herself was a long journey.”

「學會接納自己是一段漫長的歷程。」

Practice 7

> “His recovery journey lasted several years.”

「他的康復歷程持續了幾年。」

Practice 8

> “Education is a lifelong journey.”

「教育是一段終身的學習歷程。」 journey = 某人在人生、學習、康復或成長中逐步經歷變化的一段過程

Common:

- * personal journey
- * learning journey
- * recovery journey
- * spiritual journey
- * journey of self-discovery

This is genuinely distinct from literal travel because no physical movement is necessary.

4. journey = progress of an organization/project/product through stages (發展歷程) — 發展歷程 ; 過程

The metaphor can extend beyond individual people.

Practice 9

> “The company’s journey from a small startup to a global brand took twenty years.”

「這家公司由小型初創企業發展成全球品牌的歷程花了二十年。」

Practice 10

> “The report describes the project’s journey from idea to completion.”

「報告描述了這個項目從構想到完成的整個發展過程。」 journey = 某個組織、產品、計劃等由一個階段逐步發展到另一個階段的歷程

For strict counting, this belongs under figurative Meaning 3.

5. journey = spiritual/emotional process (心靈 / 精神) — 心路歷程；精神旅程

Practice 11

> “The book describes her spiritual journey.”

「這本書描述了她的心靈 / 精神歷程。」

Practice 12

> “Grief can be a difficult emotional journey.”

「悲傷可以是一段艱難的心路歷程。」

This is one of the most established figurative applications of Meaning 3.

It should be explicitly shown, but not counted as a separate core meaning.

6. journey = verb: travel from one place to another (動詞) — 旅行；前往

Journey can also be a verb.

It usually sounds somewhat more literary, formal, or narrative than travel.

Practice 13

> “They journeyed across the desert.”

「他們跋涉 / 旅行穿越沙漠。」

Practice 14

> “She journeyed north in search of work.”

「她一路向北前往 / 旅行尋找工作。」 journey = 進行一段旅程，尤其是較長、較艱難或敘事性較強的旅行

Common:

- * journey across
- * journey through
- * journey north/south
- * journey to somewhere

7. journey = verb, figurative: pass through stages of experience (比喻動詞) — 經歷；走過

The verb can also be metaphorical.

Practice 15

> “The story follows a young man as he journeys toward self-understanding.”

「故事描寫一名年輕人如何一路走向 / 經歷自我理解。」

Practice 16

> “We journey through different stages of life.”

「我們在人生中會走過不同階段。」

For strict counting, this is the verb counterpart of figurative Meaning 3.

Useful construction: journey to / from / through / across journey to

> “the journey to Seoul”

「前往首爾的旅程」

journey from A to B

> “the journey from school to work”

「從學校到工作的旅程」

This can be literal or figurative.

journey through

> “a journey through Europe”

「穿越歐洲的旅程」

> “a journey through grief”

「走過悲傷的心路歷程」

The same spatial grammar transfers naturally into figurative use.

Useful construction: on a journey — 在旅途中

Practice 17

> “They met while they were on a journey through Asia.”

「他們在亞洲旅行途中認識。」

Figuratively:

> “She is on a journey of self-discovery.”

「她正在經歷一段自我探索的歷程。」

Useful compound: journey time — 行程時間

Practice 18

> “The new route reduces journey time by twenty minutes.”

「新路線把行程時間縮短了二十分鐘。」

This is a useful transport compound, not a new meaning.

Important distinction: journey vs trip

This is the most important learner contrast.

trip

often focuses on the entire occasion of going somewhere and returning, especially for a particular purpose.

> business trip

> school trip

> weekend trip

journey

focuses more strongly on the movement/process of travelling from one place to another.

> a three-hour train journey

Compare:

> “My trip to Seoul was amazing.”

= 整次首爾旅行很棒。

> “The journey to Seoul took five hours.”

= 前往首爾的行程用了五小時。

However, in literary or reflective writing, journey can also encompass the whole experience, as in your passage.

Important distinction: journey vs travel

travel

is the broad activity of going from place to place.

It is usually uncountable as a noun:

> international travel

journey

is normally one particular trip/process:

> a long journey

So:

> travel = 旅行這種活動

> journey = 一段具體旅程

Important distinction: journey vs voyage

voyage

traditionally emphasizes long travel by:

* sea

* spacecraft

journey

can be by almost any mode of transport or on foot.

> train journey

> sea voyage

Modern metaphorical uses of voyage also exist, but journey is much broader.

Important distinction: journey vs tour

tour

usually involves visiting several places, often following an organized route, sometimes returning to the starting point.

journey

is simply movement from one place to another.

> sightseeing tour

> train journey

Important distinction: journey vs commute

commute

specifically means regular travel between home and work/school.

journey

is any particular travel from one place to another.

Your commute consists of repeated journeys.

Important distinction: journey vs adventure

adventure

emphasizes excitement, novelty, risk, or unusual experience.

journey

does not imply excitement or danger.

A routine train ride can be a journey but not an adventure.

Important distinction: journey vs process

In figurative language:

process is neutral and analytical.

journey

adds the metaphor of:

- * stages
- * movement
- * time
- * personal experience
- * eventual destination or development > recovery process

> recovery journey

The second sounds more personal and experiential.

Important distinction: journey vs path

Figuratively:

path

emphasizes the route or direction taken.

journey

emphasizes the experience of moving along it.

> career path

> career journey

Countability note

Journey as a noun is normally countable:

> a journey

> two journeys

Natural:

> "It was a long journey."

Not normally:

> “It was long journey.” ❌

Unlike travel, it readily takes an article.

Grammar note: journey is less common as a verb than travel

Natural everyday:

> “We travelled across Europe.”

More literary/narrative:

> “We journeyed across Europe.”

Both are correct, but journey as a verb gives the sentence a more deliberate or storytelling tone.

Related forms

The practical morphological family is relatively small:

* journey
* journeys
* journeyed
* journeying

A noun journeyer exists historically/rarely for “a traveller,” but it is not useful enough for the modern learner core and should be excluded.

This is a good example of the SOP’s modern-usefulness filter: the family should stay small rather than be padded with archaic forms.

| journey — figurative verb | 經歷不同人生 / 成長階段；走過某段歷程 |

| journey time | 一段行程所需的時間 |

For your original sentence

> “It carries the mood of that journey with it.”

The exact meaning is:

journey = 那次去首爾旅行的整段旅途和旅行經歷

So:

> the mood of that journey

= 那趟旅程所帶來的氣氛、感受和回憶

This use is slightly richer than simply saying:

> trip

because journey helps emphasize the remembered experience and emotional continuity of travelling.

For your database, I would count 2 genuinely useful core meanings for journey:

1. literal journey — travel from one place to another
2. figurative journey — a gradual process of change, development, learning, recovery, or life experience

I would keep the verb journey = travel/go through stages aligned with those same two branches, and exclude rare forms such as journeyer from the practical learner family.
