Important distinctions

perform vs do

do

very broad everyday verb:

> do a task

perform

more formal and often suggests:

- * carrying out a defined task/procedure
- * showing a level of performance
- * executing professionally

> perform a test

> perform surgery

> perform a duty

So perform is usually more formal/specific than do.

perform vs carry out

These overlap strongly for tasks/procedures.

perform

common with:

- * tasks
- * duties
- * tests
- * operations
- * functions

carry out

focuses on:

> actually putting a plan/instruction/task into action > carry out an investigation > carry out a plan

Both can mean 執行, but collocations differ.

perform vs execute

perform

broad formal verb for carrying out an action or function.

execute

often sounds more technical/formal and emphasizes precise implementation.

> execute a command

> execute a plan

> execute code

In computing, execute is generally more precise than perform.

perform vs function

perform

can describe how well something works:

> "The engine performed well."

function

focuses on whether/how it operates:

> "The engine is functioning normally."

So:

perform = quality of operation

function = operation itself

perform vs compete

In sport:

compete

= take part in competition

perform

= how well you actually do

A runner may:

> compete in a race

and:

> perform well or badly in it.

perform vs achieve

perform

focuses on the process/level of doing achieve

focuses on reaching a result or goal

> “She performed well.”

= 她表現很好。

> “She achieved a personal best.”

= 她達成個人最佳成績。

perform vs present

Especially in entertainment:

perform

= actually sing, dance, act, play music present

= introduce/show/host something

A singer performs a song.

A presenter presents the programme.

perform vs act

act

specifically means perform a dramatic role, or behave in a certain way.

perform

broader:

- * sing
- * dance
- * act
- * play music
- * complete a task
- * function

So acting is one type of performing.

performance vs result

performance

= how someone/something performed overall result

= final outcome

A team can have:

> a strong performance

but:

> a disappointing result

For example, they may play very well but lose narrowly.

performance vs achievement

performance

= actual execution and level shown achievement

= successful accomplishment

A good performance does not always produce a major achievement.

performance vs productivity

performance

broad quality/effectiveness of work productivity

specifically emphasizes output relative to time/resources

An employee may have high-quality performance without necessarily producing the largest quantity of work.

high-performance vs high-performing

This distinction is especially useful.

high-performance + noun describes a system, environment, field, or product designed for/operating at high level:

- > high-performance sport
- > high-performance engine

high-performing + noun

describes someone/something actually producing strong results:

- > high-performing athlete
- > high-performing team

performer vs performance performer

person/thing producing the result or doing the act

performance

the act, output, or level achieved

- > “She is a strong performer.”
- > “Her performance was strong.”

Important grammar note: perform can be transitive or intransitive

Transitive

- > “perform a task”

takes an object.

Intransitive

> “The team performed well.”

no direct object.

This grammatical shift is important because the Chinese changes naturally:

perform a task

= 執行任務

perform well

= 表現良好

perform on stage

= 演出

Family-extension sweep

After the full workplace, sport, entertainment, medical, technical, machine/system, legal, compound, grammatical, and second-pass audit, the useful modern family includes:

* perform — carry out = 執行 / 進行

* perform a task = 執行任務

* perform a duty = 履行職責

* perform — achieve/show results = 表現 / 發揮

* perform well/badly = 表現好 / 差

* perform under pressure = 在壓力下發揮 * perform — stage/art = 表演 / 演出

* perform a song/play = 演唱 / 演出

* performing arts = 表演藝術

* performer — artist = 表演者

* performer — result-based = 表現者 / 表現出色的人事物 * perform — machine/system = 運作 / 表現 * perform a test = 進行測試 * perform an experiment = 進行實驗

* perform an analysis/calculation = 進行分析 / 計算

* perform surgery/an operation = 進行手術

* perform a function = 發揮功能

* perform a role = 履行角色

* performance — general result level = 表現 / 績效 * athletic performance = 運動表現

* job performance = 工作表現

* performance review/appraisal = 績效評估 * high-performance = 高性能 / 高水平的 * high-performing = 表現優秀的 * performance indicator = 績效指標 * performance metric = 表現衡量指標 * performance — artistic show = 演出 * performance — legal duty = 義務履行 * perform a ceremony = 主持 / 進行儀式

I would stop there. Beyond this point, most additional combinations are transparent collocations rather than new learner-relevant meanings.
