Very important.

receipt

proves payment has already been made.

invoice

requests or records payment that is due.

> invoice → 請你付款

> receipt → 證明你已付款

A business may first send an invoice, then issue a receipt after payment.

Important distinction 2: receipt vs bill

bill

states how much you owe.

receipt

states that you paid.

> restaurant bill

餐廳帳單

> restaurant receipt

付款後的收據

Important distinction 3: receipt vs ticket

Very relevant to your passage.

ticket

usually proves entitlement to:

- * travel
- * entry
- * participation

receipt

proves a transaction/payment.

So the scrapbook's:

- * tickets preserve where the family went
- * receipts preserve what they bought/paid for Both become memory objects, but their original functions differ.

Important distinction 4: receipt vs proof of purchase

receipt

is one common type of proof of purchase.

proof of purchase

broader and may include:

- * receipt
- * invoice
- * bank statement
- * order confirmation

So:

receipt $\subset$ proof of purchase

Important distinction 5: receipt vs record

receipt

specifically confirms something was received or paid.

record

any stored evidence/information.

A receipt is a kind of transaction record, but not every record is a receipt.

Important distinction 6: receipt = document vs receipt = receiving

Document

> Keep the receipt.

保留收據。

Receiving

> upon receipt of your application

收到你的申請後。

These are genuinely separate learner senses.

Important distinction 7: receipt singular vs receipts accounting

a receipt usually a document.

receipts

in accounting can mean money received.

> Keep your receipts.

保留收據。

versus:

> Annual receipts increased.

年度收入增加。

Context is crucial.

Important distinction 8: receipts vs revenue

receipts

money actually received.

revenue

broader income generated by business/government activity.

They can overlap, but are not always identical in accounting usage.

Important distinction 9: receipts vs profit

receipts

money coming in.

profit

money remaining after costs/expenses.

A business may have high receipts but low profit.

Important distinction 10: acknowledge receipt vs reply

acknowledge receipt

only confirms that something arrived.

reply

responds substantively to its content.

> We acknowledge receipt of your complaint.

means:

我們確認已收到投訴

—not necessarily that the complaint has already been investigated.

Important distinction 11: upon receipt vs after receiving

They mean essentially the same thing, but:

upon receipt of

formal/business style.

after receiving

ordinary everyday style.

> upon receipt of payment

formal

> after we receive your payment

more conversational

Important distinction 12: in receipt of vs receive

receive ordinary verb.

be in receipt of

formal administrative phrase, especially for benefits/income.

> She receives a pension.

她領取退休金。

> She is in receipt of a pension.

formal equivalent.

Family-extension note

Receipt has two major modern branches:

1. documentary proof of payment

- * receipt
- * sales receipt
- * gift receipt
- * receipt book
- * receipted invoice

2. act/state of receiving

- * receipt of an application
- * upon receipt
- * acknowledge receipt
- * in receipt of

A third business/accounting extension develops from the second:

3. money received

- * cash receipts
- * tax receipts
- * box-office receipts

The underlying semantic core is:

something being received which explains why the same family can refer both to:

- * the paper proving money was received,
- * and the act or amount of receiving itself.

For your original sentence

> It was a scrapbook filled with printed photos, short captions, little notes, and a few tickets and receipts from family outings we had shared over the years.

Here:

receipts = 付款後留下來的收據

They are no longer important because of their financial function. In the scrapbook they have become memory objects—physical traces of meals, purchases, attractions, or trips the family experienced together.

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 那是一本剪貼簿，裏面放了沖印照片、簡短文字說明、小紙條，以及一些家庭出遊時留下的票根和收據。

For this passage, the exact sense is the straightforward proof-of-payment document meaning of receipt.
