Passage recap

> “His father survived, though recovery was slow.”

Here:

recovery = the process of gradually becoming healthy and physically capable again after a

serious medical problem

Best Traditional Chinese:

* 康復

* 復原

* contextually: 康復過程

Natural contextual translation:

他的父親活了下來，不過康復得很慢。 **

Passage MCQ-ready meaning

recovery

= the process of becoming healthy or strong again after illness or injury

康復；恢復健康

The major learner split is:

> recover from an illness

> → 從疾病中康復

but:

> recover a stolen car

> → 尋回失竊汽車

> recover deleted files

> → 恢復已刪除檔案

> recover costs

> → 收回成本

> recover one's composure

> → 恢復鎮定

> market recovery

> → 市場回升

> economic recovery

> → 經濟復甦

A particularly useful conceptual shortcut is:

recover = something was lost, weakened, damaged, or interrupted → it comes back

That “something” might be:

* health

* normal functioning

* an object

* data

* money

* confidence/composure

* market value

So the passage uses the medical health-restoration branch: Kelvin’s father survived, but returning to his previous level of health and function took time.
