BP. IMPORTANT DISTINCTIONS

response vs reply

reply

= direct answer to something said/written.

response

= broader; can be:

- * reply
- * action
- * emotional reaction
- * physiological change

Example:

> “She replied, ‘Yes.’”

> = 她回答「是」。

> “Her response was to leave the room.”

> = 她的反應是離開房間。

A response does not have to contain words.

response vs answer

answer

= solution/reply to a question.

response

= any reaction or reply.

> answer a question

> = 回答問題

> response to criticism

> = 對批評的回應 / 反應

Answer is narrower.

response vs reaction

reaction

= what happens because of a stimulus/event, often emotional/automatic.

response

= broader and may imply more deliberate action.

Compare:

> “Her first reaction was anger.”

> = 第一反應是憤怒。

> “Her response was to write a formal complaint.”

> = 她的回應是寫正式投訴信。

But they overlap heavily.

response vs feedback

response

= any reply/reaction.

feedback

= information about performance/effect, often intended to improve something.

> audience response

> = 觀眾反應

> audience feedback

> = 觀眾提供的意見 / 回饋

Not identical.

response vs comment

You already curated comment.

comment

= linguistic remark/opinion.

response

= broader reaction, which may include:

- * comment
- * reply
- * like
- * action
- * emotional reaction

In your passage:

> comments are individual responses

but:

> responses is the broader category.

response vs approval

You already curated approval.

response

= any reaction.

approval

= specifically positive judgement/acceptance.

So:

> negative response is possible.

But:

> negative approval makes little sense.

response vs behaviour

behaviour

= general manner/actions.

response

= behaviour specifically caused by something preceding it.

A response has an identifiable trigger/context.

respond vs react

respond

often implies:

- * answer
- * appropriate/adaptive reaction
- * sometimes more considered

react often emphasizes:

- * immediate emotional/physical reaction

Compare:

> “She reacted angrily.”

> = 她立即憤怒反應。

> “She responded calmly.”

> = 她冷靜地作出回應。

Not a strict rule, but a useful tendency.

respond vs answer

answer

can take a direct object:

> answer the question ✓

respond

normally needs to:

> respond to the question ✓

> respond the question ✗ normally

This is a crucial grammar distinction.

response to vs response for

Usually:

> response to a message/problem/question

because the response is triggered by it.

for may occur when stating purpose/recipient in other structures, but it is not the standard complement for what is being answered.

respond to someone vs respond to something

Person:

> “She responded to me.”

= 她回應了我。

Message/event:

> “She responded to the email.”

= 她回覆了電郵。

Same grammar, different referent.

responsive vs responsible

A classic spelling trap.

responsive

= 快速 / 積極作出反應的

responsible

= 負責任的 ; 負有責任的

> responsive customer service

> = 回應迅速的客服

> responsible employee

> = 負責任的員工

Completely different.

responsive vs reactive

responsive

= able/willing to react appropriately.

reactive

= tending to react after events rather than anticipating them; or chemically reactive.

In management:

> responsive

> often positive

> reactive

> can imply always responding after problems occur.

responsive vs sensitive

responsive

= actually changes/reacts when stimulated.

sensitive

= easily detects or is affected by small changes.

A sensor can be:

- * highly sensitive

- * but slow to respond

So they are not identical.

responsiveness vs response time

response time

= measurable delay before response.

responsiveness

= broader quality of responding quickly/effectively.

A customer-service team can have:

- > short response time

and therefore appear:

- > highly responsive.

response rate vs response time

Very important.

response rate

= proportion who respond.

response time

= how long responding takes.

> 80% response rate

> = 80% 回覆率

> 2-hour response time

> = 兩小時回應時間

Excellent MCQ contrast.

response rate vs conversion rate

response rate

= proportion that reacts/replies.

conversion rate

= proportion that completes desired action.

Someone may respond to an advertisement without buying.

respondent vs responder

Another excellent distinction.

respondent

usually:

* survey participant

* legal answering party

responder

= person who responds, especially in emergency contexts.

> survey respondent

> = 受訪者

> first responder

> = 前線緊急救援人員

Do not confuse them.

response vs responder

response

= the reaction/action.

responder

= person/system making the response.

> emergency response

> = 緊急應變

> emergency responder

> = 緊急救援人員

response — medical vs reply

Communication:

> “I got no response.”

= 沒有收到回覆。

Medicine:

> “The patient showed no response.”

= 病人沒有反應。

Same wording, dramatically different interpretation.

response to treatment vs cure

response to treatment

= patient shows measurable improvement/change.

cure

= disease eliminated/resolved.

A good response does not necessarily mean a cure.

immune response vs immunity immune response

= process/activity of the immune system reacting.

immunity

= state/capacity of protection.

Related but different.

stress response vs stress

stress

= state/pressure itself.

stress response

= body/mind's reaction to that stressor.

stimulus vs response

stimulus

= thing that triggers change.

response

= resulting reaction.

Example:

> notification buzz = stimulus
> checking phone = response

Very relevant to your passage.

automatic response vs deliberate response

automatic response

= happens without conscious planning.

deliberate response

= consciously chosen.

The passage suggests repeated notification checking may shift toward:

> automatic response.

emergency response vs emergency service

emergency response

= actions taken during emergency.

emergency services

= organisations/personnel such as ambulance, police, fire services.

The services carry out the response.

incident response vs disaster response

incident response

broader operational/IT/security handling of an incident.

disaster response

specifically deals with large-scale disaster/emergency consequences.

request vs response

In computing:

request

= message asking system to do/provide something.

response

= message/results returned.

> request → response

A foundational computing pair.

HTTP response vs webpage

HTTP response

= protocol-level data returned by server.

webpage

= content/browser representation that may be produced from that response.

Not the same thing.

responsive design vs fast response

responsive design

does not primarily mean:

> website is fast.

It means:

> layout adapts to screen/device size.

A responsive website can still load slowly.

Excellent technical trap.

responsive website vs interactive website

responsive

= adapts layout to device/screen.

interactive

= allows user actions/input.

A site can be:

- * responsive but minimally interactive

- * interactive but poorly responsive in layout response bias vs nonresponse bias

response bias

= people who answer may give systematically distorted answers.

nonresponse bias

= people who do not answer differ systematically from those who do.

Completely different source of survey error.

respondent vs participant

participant

= anyone taking part in a study/activity.

respondent

= person specifically answering questions/survey.

All respondents are participants in a survey, but not all research participants are necessarily respondents.

response in your passage

The paragraph says:

> “Some people wrote that they had never felt so ‘seen’ before, while others tagged their friends and said, ‘This is literally us.’ Those responses reminded me that social media can create connection in a powerful and immediate way.”

Here responses refers collectively to:

- * written comments
- * tags
- * expressions of recognition
- * humorous reactions
- * people saying the video represented their experience

So it is broader than merely:

> comments

The exact sense is:

> people’s reactions and replies to the video

The writer interprets those responses as evidence of:

> connection and shared experience.

Family-extension sweep

For your original sentence

> “Some people wrote that they had never felt so ‘seen’ before, while others tagged their friends and said, ‘This is literally us.’ Those responses reminded me that social media can create connection in a powerful and immediate way.”

The exact meaning is:

responses = 其他使用者看完影片後作出的各種回應，包括留言、標記朋友、表示共鳴，以及說影片準確反映了自己的生活。

Natural translation:

> 「那些回應令我明白，社交媒體可以用非常有力而直接的方式建立人與人之間的聯繫。」
