Important distinction 1: restore vs repair

repair

fix something broken or damaged.

restore

bring something back toward an earlier/original good condition.

> repair a broken window

> 修理破窗

> restore an old house

> 修復老屋至接近原貌

Restoration may include repairs, but it is broader.

Important distinction 2: restore vs recover

restore

usually transitive: someone/something causes X to return.

> restore trust

恢復信任

recover

often intransitive: person/system itself returns.

> recover from illness

病後康復

Compare:

> She recovered her confidence.

> 她重新找回信心。

> The experience restored her confidence.

> 那段經歷令她恢復信心。

Important distinction 3: restore vs return

return

general: go/give back.

restore

specifically return to an earlier desirable state, position, or condition.

> return the book

歸還書本

> restore the building

修復建築

26. restore something to someone — 歸還；恢復某人擁有某物

A formal use.

Practice 1

> The court restored the property to its rightful owner.

法院把物業歸還給合法物主。

Practice 2

> The decision restored control to the local authority.

該決定把控制權交還 / 恢復給地方當局。

MCQ-ready definition:

restore X to someone = 把曾經失去、被拿走的 X 正式交還給某人

Important distinction 4: restore vs rebuild

Very relevant to trust.

restore trust

bring previous trust back.

rebuild trust

build trust again after damage, often emphasizing gradual effort.

In natural English they overlap strongly.

For your passage:

> restore trust

works because trust existed before Kevin's accusation and then was repaired.

Important distinction 5: restore trust vs earn trust

restore trust

trust existed, was damaged, then comes back.

earn trust

gain someone's trust, perhaps for the first time.

Kevin needs to restore trust, not necessarily earn it from zero.

Important distinction 6: restore confidence vs reassure

restore confidence

bring lost confidence back.

reassure someone say/do something that reduces their worry.

Reassurance may help restore confidence, but they are not identical.

Important distinction 7: restore order vs maintain order

maintain order

keep existing order.

restore order

order has already broken down, so you bring it back.

The prefix-like semantic idea is:

restore = return

Important distinction 8: restore a file vs reopen a file

restore

recover an earlier/deleted version.

reopen

simply open it again.

If a file was deleted:

> restore it

If it was merely closed:

> reopen it

Important distinction 9: restore from backup vs recover data

They overlap.

restore from backup

use a known saved copy.

recover data

broader; may involve retrieving damaged/deleted data even without a normal backup.

Important distinction 10: restoration vs renovation

restoration

aims to preserve/recreate original or historic condition.

renovation

modernizes or improves a building, potentially changing it significantly.

> historic restoration

歷史建築修復

> kitchen renovation

廚房翻新

Important distinction 11: restoration vs repair

repair

fix damage.

restoration

whole process of returning to earlier condition.

A painting restoration may involve many tiny repairs.

Important distinction 12: restorative vs restoring

restorative

has the quality of helping recovery.

> restorative sleep

有助恢復的睡眠

restoring

the act/process is currently bringing something back.

> restoring an old house

正在修復老屋

Family-extension note

Restore has one very stable semantic core:

bring something back to a previous, proper, healthy, complete, or desirable state

That expands into:

1. relationships/emotions

- * restore trust
- * restore confidence

2. social/system condition

- * restore order
- * restore peace
- * restore balance

3. services/functions

- * restore power
- * restore service
- * restore access

4. physical objects

- * restore a building
- * restore a painting

5. digital systems

- * restore a file
- * restore from backup

6. health/strength

- * restore someone to health
- * restore energy

7. rights/status

- * restore someone's position
- * restore rights

8. noun/adjective family

- * restoration
- * restorative

For your passage, the key branch is:

restore trust = bring back trust that had been damaged

Master comparison

Form / expression	Traditional Chinese	Core idea

For your original sentence

> Kevin apologised to me because he had blamed me unfairly for delaying the project, and his apology meant a lot because it restored trust rather than just saving face.

Here:

restored trust = Kevin 的行為原本傷害了彼此的信任，而那次真誠道歉令這份信任重新建立

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 那次道歉之所以重要，是因為它修復了彼此的信任，而不只是為了給自己下台階。

The useful distinction is:

> build trust = 建立信任

> earn trust = 贏得信任

> restore trust = 信任曾經存在，但受損後重新修復

> rebuild trust = 一步一步重新建立受損的信任

For this passage, restore trust is especially precise because the relationship already had trust before the misunderstanding damaged it.
