Important distinctions

strength vs power

These overlap, especially in sport.

strength

often means:

> ability to produce force

power

often means:

> ability to produce force quickly

In sports science:

strength ≠ exactly power

A person can be very strong but not especially explosive.

strength vs stamina

strength

= force-producing capacity stamina

= ability to continue activity for a long time without excessive fatigue

A weightlifter may have great strength.

A distance runner may have great stamina.

Athletes can need both.

strength vs endurance

strength

focuses on force

endurance

focuses on sustaining activity or effort over time

This is especially relevant because your passage lists:

> endurance, speed work, strength conditioning as separate training components.

strength vs fitness

fitness

broad overall physical preparedness

strength

one specific component of physical fitness

So strength is part of fitness, not the whole concept.

strength vs ability

ability

very broad capacity to do something

strength

can mean a particularly strong ability or advantage

> “Communication is an ability.”

neutral

> “Communication is her strength.”

means it is one of her stronger areas.

strength vs advantage

strength

often means an internal positive quality advantage

often means something that gives someone a better position relative to others

They overlap:

> “Speed is her strength.”

= speed is something she does well.

> “Her speed gives her an advantage.”

= it improves her competitive position.

strength vs strong point

These are very close.

> “Communication is one of her strengths.”

> “Communication is one of her strong points.”

Both mean:

*溝通是她的長處之一。 ****

strength vs resilience

strength

can be broad physical or mental power resilience

specifically emphasizes:

> ability to recover and continue after difficulty, stress, or damage

Mental resilience is one type of psychological strength.

strength vs intensity

intensity

means how extreme/strong something feels or occurs

strength

can also express intensity, but is more flexible across domains

Examples:

- * signal strength
- * coffee strength
- * argument strength
- * wind strength

strong vs powerful

strong

very broad:

- * physically strong
- * strong argument
- * strong smell
- * strong economy

powerful

often emphasizes:

- * great force
- * great influence
- * strong effect

You can say:

> strong coffee

but not normally:

> powerful coffee

in the same ordinary sense.

strong vs tough

strong

= possessing strength

tough

= able to endure hardship, damage, or difficulty

A material may be strong but brittle.

A person may be tough because they tolerate pain well.

Important countability note strength = power/force

usually uncountable:

> “She needs more strength.”

a strength = one advantage countable:

> “Patience is a strength.”

strengths = several advantages

> “Her strengths include leadership and communication.”

This is one of the strongest grammar distinctions in the family.

Family-extension sweep

After the full physical, psychological, sports, engineering, scientific, technological, military, economic, academic, countability, fixed-expression, and second-pass audit, the useful modern family includes:

* strength — physical force = 力量 / 肌力

* physical strength = 體力 / 身體力量

* strength training = 肌力訓練

* strength and conditioning = 體能及肌力訓練

* strength — mental resilience = 堅強 / 內在力量

* inner strength = 內在意志力

* a strength / strengths = 長處 / 優勢

* play to your strengths = 發揮所長

* strength — intensity = 強度

* signal strength = 訊號強度 * strength — concentration/potency = 濃度 / 效力 * medicine strength = 藥力 / 劑量規格 * strength — material = 材料強度
 * tensile strength = 抗拉強度
 * structural strength = 結構強度 * strength — personnel numbers = 人數 / 編制力量 * at full strength = 全員到齊 / 完整陣容 * military strength = 軍事力量
 * numerical strength = 人數優勢 * economic/market strength = 經濟 / 市場強勢 * currency strength = 貨幣強勢 * strength of argument/evidence = 論點 / 證據力度 * strength of reaction/feeling = 強烈程度 * strength of smell/taste = 濃烈程度 * strong = 強壯的；強烈的；有力的；出色的；濃的 * strongly = 強烈地；有力地
 * strengthen = 加強；增強；鞏固
 * strengthening = 強化
 * go from strength to strength = 越來越成功 * strength in depth = 人才厚度 / 後備實力
 * on the strength of = 基於 / 憑藉

I would stop there. There are narrower specialist uses in physics, chemistry, engineering and finance, but the above gets very close to the useful modern learner-relevant ceiling without becoming a technical dictionary.

For your original sentence

> “...endurance, speed work, strength conditioning, injury prevention and tapering...”

The exact meaning is:

strength = 肌肉和身體產生力量、穩定動作並承受運動負荷的能力

So:

strength conditioning = 透過有系統的體能及阻力訓練提升肌力、身體穩定性及運動承受能力

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

This is the physical-force/training sense, not strength = 長處, 證據力度, 訊號強度, or 市場強勢.
