JJ. PASSAGE RECAP

“Students can be asked to write a diary entry after a role-play, compare their performance with the original text, or explain what their character’s choices reveal.”

text

= the original written work or passage on which the students’ role-play/performance is based

Best Traditional Chinese:

- 原文
- 原文本
- 原作文字
- contextually: 原文／原作

Natural contextual translation:

學生可以在角色扮演後寫一篇日記，把自己的表演與原文比較，或解釋角色的選擇反映了甚麼。

Passage MCQ-ready meaning

text

= a written work or body of written words that can be read, studied, interpreted, or performed

文本；原文；文字內容

The biggest learner branches are:

original text

→ 原文

literary text

→ 文學文本

text of the law

→ 法律條文／法律文本

full text

→ 全文

but in ordinary digital communication:

a text

→ 一則短訊

text me

→ 傳訊息給我

Computing creates another large branch:

plain text

→ 純文字

text file

→ 文字檔

text editor

→ 文字編輯器

text field

→ 文字輸入欄

full-text search

→ 全文搜尋

text-to-speech

→ 文字轉語音

Literary analysis adds:

textual evidence

→ 原文／文本證據

subtext

→ 潛台詞

intertextuality

→ 互文性

paratext

→ 副文本

One especially important grammar distinction is:

text

as uncountable = 文字

There is too much text on the page.

頁面上的文字太多。

but:

a text

= 一篇／一部文本

We studied three texts.

我們研讀三篇文本。

and informally:

a text

= 一則短訊

I got a text from her.

我收到她的一則短訊。

A useful semantic shortcut is:

TEXT = a coherent body of meaningful words treated as an object.

That object may be:

1. a story or passage to study,
2. the exact wording of a law or speech,
3. ordinary written words on a screen,
4. a mobile-phone message,
5. a digital text file,
6. or an academic object of interpretation.

In the passage, original text is important because the drama activity does not replace close reading. Students return from performance to the written source and ask: Did our acting match the wording, characterization, tone, and choices that the original text actually supports?

That is how the performance becomes evidence-based interpretation rather than free improvisation.
