

Got it — I've checked the reference PDF, and I'll use that level of exhaustion moving forward: broad semantic branches, important constructions, compounds, register notes, family extensions, fine-grained contrasts, and a large MCQ-ready master comparison rather than stopping after the most obvious senses. Your reference explicitly models this by grouping a word into many semantic branches and then doing a separate family-extension sweep and master comparison.

IMPORTANT DISTINCTIONS

vulnerability vs weakness

weakness

= lack of strength/ability; a weak point.

vulnerability

= exposure to possible harm.

A person can be strong but still vulnerable.

Example:

> “Public figures may be powerful but emotionally vulnerable.”

「公眾人物可以很有影響力，但情緒上仍可能容易受到傷害。」

So:

> vulnerability ≠ simple weakness

This is crucial.

vulnerable vs weak

weak

= lacking strength.

vulnerable

= open to harm.

> weak structure

> = 結構本身不夠強

> vulnerable structure

> = 容易受某種威脅破壞

Close, but not identical.

vulnerability vs sensitivity

sensitivity

= tendency to react strongly.

vulnerability

= likelihood of being harmed.

> emotional sensitivity

> = 對情緒刺激反應較強

> emotional vulnerability

> = 更容易被情緒事件傷害

Sensitivity can contribute to vulnerability, but they are not the same.

vulnerability vs insecurity

insecurity

= lack of confidence/security.

vulnerability

= exposure to harm.

> insecurity about appearance

> = 對外貌缺乏自信

> vulnerability to criticism

> = 容易被批評傷害

vulnerability vs fragility

You already have fragile mapped.

fragility

= easily broken/damaged because something itself is delicate.

vulnerability

= exposed to a threat, whether or not inherently delicate.

A strong system may still have:

> one vulnerability

without being generally fragile.

vulnerability vs risk

risk

= possibility that harm may occur.

vulnerability

= characteristic/condition making harm easier or more severe.

For example:

> flood risk

> = 發生洪水損失的風險

> flood vulnerability

> = 某社區一旦遇到洪水有多容易受害

Important risk-analysis distinction.

vulnerability vs exposure

exposure

= degree of contact with a threat.

vulnerability

= how susceptible you are once exposed.

Example:

Two houses can have equal exposure to flooding, but one may be more vulnerable because it has weaker construction.

This distinction is especially important in:

- * disaster risk
- * finance
- * cybersecurity
- * public health

vulnerability vs susceptibility

susceptibility

= tendency to be affected.

vulnerability

= broader exposure + weakness + potential harm.

> susceptibility to infection

> = 易感染性

> vulnerability to infection

> = 因健康 / 環境因素而容易感染並受影響

Susceptibility is often more technical/biological.

vulnerability vs openness

openness

= willingness to communicate honestly.

vulnerability

= openness that includes the possibility of being emotionally hurt.

You can be open about facts without being emotionally vulnerable.

vulnerability vs vulnerability disclosure

In cybersecurity:

vulnerability

= actual security weakness.

vulnerability disclosure

= process of reporting/revealing that weakness.

Do not confuse the flaw with the reporting process.

vulnerability vs exploit

vulnerability

= weakness that can potentially be abused.

exploit

= method/code/action used to take advantage of the weakness.

So:

> vulnerability = 漏洞

> exploit = 利用漏洞的方法 / 利用行為

Very important cybersecurity distinction.

vulnerability vs threat

threat

= something capable of causing harm.

vulnerability

= weakness/exposure the threat can exploit.

Example:

> hacker = threat actor

> unpatched software flaw = vulnerability

vulnerability vs attack surface

attack surface

= all possible points through which a system could be attacked.

vulnerability

= a specific exploitable weakness.

Technical but useful.

vulnerability vs victimhood

vulnerability

= susceptibility to harm.

victimhood

= condition/identity of having been harmed.

Being vulnerable does not mean one has already become a victim.

vulnerability vs helplessness

helplessness

= inability to act/control.

vulnerability

= possibility of being hurt.

Someone can be vulnerable while still having agency and resources.

Important modern psychological nuance.

vulnerable group vs minority group

These overlap sometimes, but not always.

minority group

= group smaller in number or socially minoritized.

vulnerable group

= group at elevated risk of harm/exploitation/disadvantage.

A minority group is not automatically vulnerable in every context, and a vulnerable group need not be numerically small.

vulnerable vs disadvantaged

disadvantaged

= lacking social/economic advantages.

vulnerable

= particularly at risk of harm.

There is overlap, but the concepts differ.

vulnerable vs endangered

vulnerable

in ordinary English:

= at elevated risk.

endangered

= at more serious risk of extinction, in conservation contexts.

In formal conservation systems, these may be distinct categories.

vulnerability — emotional openness vs emotional weakness

This is especially important in modern English.

> “Showing vulnerability”

does not necessarily mean:

> “showing that you are weak.”

It often means:

> honestly allowing others to see fear, uncertainty, sadness, need, or imperfection and may even be treated positively in relationship/leadership contexts.

vulnerability — singular vs plural

vulnerability

uncountable:

= general state/condition

> “The experience created vulnerability.”

「這種經歷造成脆弱感。」

a vulnerability / vulnerabilities

countable:

= specific weak point(s)

> “The software has a vulnerability.”

「軟件有一個漏洞。」

> “The plan has several vulnerabilities.”

「這個計劃有幾個弱點。」

This countability shift is extremely important.

vulnerability — human vs system

Human:

> “Her vulnerability was obvious.”

= 她的脆弱感很明顯。

Technical:

> “The system has a vulnerability.”

= 系統有一個漏洞。

Same noun, radically different Chinese.

Excellent MCQ material.

vulnerability — social vs cybersecurity

Social:

> “vulnerable families”

= 弱勢家庭

Cybersecurity:

> “software vulnerability”

= 軟件漏洞

Completely different domain mapping.

vulnerability — emotional vs physical

Emotional:

> “criticism made him feel vulnerable”

= 批評令他覺得容易受傷

Physical:

> “the exposed skin is vulnerable to infection”

= 外露皮膚容易感染

Same underlying idea:

> insufficient protection against harm

vulnerability — positive vs negative connotation

This word is unusual because its connotation can shift.

Negative/risk:

> “financial vulnerability”

> = 財務脆弱性

Positive/interpersonal:

> “showing vulnerability”

> = 坦露真實脆弱的一面

So vulnerability is not always something to eliminate.

In relationships, it can imply:

* honesty

* trust

* emotional openness vulnerable to X vs vulnerable with someone vulnerable to + harmful thing

= 容易受到.....傷害

> vulnerable to criticism

vulnerable with + person

= 在某人面前願意坦露真實情緒

> vulnerable with a close friend

Very different relationship of meaning.

vulnerable to attack vs open to attack

Both can mean susceptible.

But:

vulnerable to attack

= has weakness/exposure making attack likely/effective

open to attack

can additionally mean:

= open to criticism/refutation

Both physical and figurative possibilities exist.

vulnerable in your passage

Your sentence:

> “online popularity brings not only visibility, but also vulnerability.”

The author deliberately contrasts:

visibility

= more people can see you with:

vulnerability

= more people can judge, criticise, mock, or emotionally hurt you

So here vulnerability is not primarily:

- * medical weakness,
- * cybersecurity flaw,
- * disaster exposure,
- * economic risk.

It is:

> public and emotional exposure to potential harm

Family-extension sweep
