looks at the group as a whole:

「所有學生都合格。」

every + singular noun

looks at each member individually:

> “Every student passed.”

「每一位學生都合格。」

Meaning often overlaps, but grammar differs:

> all students ✓

> every student ✓

> every students ✗

Important distinction: all vs whole

all

works with:

* plural nouns

* uncountable nouns

* time phrases

> all students

> all the water

> all day

whole

usually emphasizes one complete singular thing:

> the whole day

> the whole book

So:

> all day = 整天

> the whole day = 整個一天

Both possible, but structure differs.

Important distinction: all vs both

both specifically exactly two.

all

usually three or more, or an entire amount.

> both plants

> = 兩棵都

> all plants

> = 所有植物

If there are exactly two, both is normally more precise.

Important distinction: all vs most

You just curated most.

all

= 100% of the group.

most

= the majority, but not necessarily all.

> “All plants survived.”

= 全部都活下來。

> “Most plants survived.”

= 大部分活下來。

Very important MCQ distinction.

Important distinction: all vs altogether

all

= 全部 / 所有

altogether

= in total / completely

> “All the plants survived.”

「所有植物都活下來。」

> “There were twenty plants altogether.”

「總共有二十棵植物。」

Not interchangeable.

Important distinction: all of vs all

General:

> “All plants need water.”

Specific:

> “All of these plants need water.”

With pronouns, of is required:

> all of them

> all them  in standard formal grammar

Important distinction: all day vs every day

all day

= the entire duration of one day.

> “She gardened all day.”

「她整天都在做園藝。」

every day

= on each day.

> “She gardens every day.”

「她每天都做園藝。」

A very important learner contrast.

Important distinction: all at once — suddenly vs simultaneously

Suddenly:

> “All at once, it started raining.”

= 突然下起雨來。

Simultaneously:

> “Everyone spoke all at once.”

= 大家同時說話。

Same phrase, two common meanings.

Important distinction: after all — 畢竟 vs 結果還是

Reason/reminder:

> “He is tired; after all, he worked all night.”

= 畢竟

Unexpected final result:

> “He came after all.”

= 結果還是來了

Excellent polyfunctionality.

Important distinction: all but — almost vs except

all but impossible

= 幾乎不可能

all but one

= 除了一個之外全部

Same words, completely different structure.

Important distinction: all in all vs overall

Both can mean:

> 總的來說

all in all

fixed discourse expression.

overall

can be adverb/adjective:

> overall, it was successful

> overall result

So overall is more grammatically flexible.
