

Absolutely — approval is a strong Tier 1 polysemy/family target because your passage uses it here:

> “I also learned that creativity matters far more than chasing approval.”

Here approval means positive judgement, acceptance, or validation from other people. But the word also has major meanings in permission, formal authorization, social acceptance, evaluation, finance, government/administration, product/process approval, and fixed expressions such as approval rating and subject to approval.

Word family: approve / approval / approved / approving / approvingly / disapprove / disapproval

Base verb: approve

Noun: approval

Adjective/participle: approved

Adjective: approving

Adverb: approvingly

Opposite verb: disapprove

Opposite noun: disapproval

Part of speech: noun (名詞) / verb (動詞)

Meaning in your passage: approval = positive judgement / validation from others — 認同 ; 肯定 ; 讚許

Your sentence:

> “creativity matters far more than chasing approval.”

Here approval means:

> positive reactions from other people that make someone feel accepted, valued, liked, or validated.

繁體中文 :

別人對自己的正面評價、認同、肯定或讚許 ; 讓自己覺得被接受、被喜歡的外界認可

Natural translation:

> “creativity matters far more than chasing approval”

「創意遠比不斷追求別人的認同 / 肯定重要。」

So here:

> approval = 外界對一個人的認同、讚許和正面評價

AF. IMPORTANT DISTINCTIONS

approval vs praise

You already mapped praise.

praise

= positive words expressing admiration.

approval

= broader acceptance/support that something is good, right, acceptable, or desirable.

> “She praised my work.”

> = 她稱讚我的工作。

> “She gave her approval.”

> = 她表示認同 / 批准。

You can approve of something without praising it aloud.

approval vs recognition

recognition

= being noticed, acknowledged, or appreciated.

approval

= positive judgement/acceptance.

> recognition

> = 別人看見 / 承認你

> approval

> = 別人覺得你做得對 / 好 / 值得接受

This distinction is central to your passage.

approval vs validation

validation

often:

= confirmation that someone's feelings, identity, or experience is understandable/legitimate.

approval

= positive judgement or acceptance.

> emotional validation

> = 確認某人的感受有其合理性

> social approval

> = 社會認同 / 讚許

They overlap psychologically but are not identical.

approval vs acceptance

acceptance

= willingness to accept someone/something.

approval

= positive judgement.

You can accept something without approving of it.

Example:

> “I accept that you made the decision, but I do not approve of it.”

「我接受你已作出這個決定這個事實，但我並不贊同這個決定。」

Very important distinction.

approval vs agreement

agreement

= same opinion / consent to terms.

approval

= positive evaluation or authorization.

> agree with an opinion

> = 同意某觀點

> approve of an action

> = 認同某行為

Close, but not identical.

approval vs consent

consent

= permission voluntarily given by the person whose agreement matters.

approval

= broader formal authorization or positive judgement.

> parental consent

> = 家長同意

> management approval

> = 管理層批准

In legal contexts, consent often has more specific requirements.

approval vs permission

permission

= allowance to do something.

approval

= formal acceptance/authorization after consideration.

> ask for permission

> = 請求准許

> obtain formal approval

> = 獲得正式批准

Approval often implies some evaluation process.

approval vs authorization authorization

= formal power/permission to do something.

approval

= formal agreement that the proposed thing is acceptable.

> approval of a plan

> = 批准計劃 > authorization to execute it

> = 授權執行

They can coincide but are conceptually distinct.

approve vs approve of

This is one of the highest-value grammar distinctions.

approve + object

= 正式批准

> “The manager approved the request.”

「經理批准了要求。」

approve of + object

= 贊成 / 認同

> “The manager approves of the idea.”

「經理贊成這個想法。」

Do not confuse them.

approval — emotional vs formal

Emotional/social:

> “I want my parents’ approval.”

= 我希望父母認同我。

Formal:

> “I need my manager’s approval.”

= 我需要經理正式批准。

Same noun, very different Chinese nuance.

Excellent MCQ material.

parental approval — two meanings

Emotional:

> “She wanted parental approval.”

= 她希望得到父母認同。

Permission:

> “The trip requires parental approval.”

= 旅行需要家長同意。

Context decides.

approved vs acceptable

approved

= officially accepted by an authority.

acceptable

= good enough / allowed by standards.

Something may be:

> acceptable in principle

but not yet:

> formally approved.

approved vs recommended

approved

= authorized/accepted.

recommended

= advised as a good choice.

> approved treatment

> = 獲正式批准的治療

> recommended treatment

> = 建議採用的治療

Not interchangeable.

approved vs certified

approved

= an authority has accepted it.

certified

= formally verified as meeting specified requirements.

An item may be certified through one process and approved through another.

approval vs endorsement

endorsement

= public/expert expression of support.

approval

= agreement/positive judgement, not necessarily public.

> celebrity endorsement

> = 名人公開支持 > regulatory approval

> = 監管批准

Very different domains.

approval vs popularity

popularity

= being liked by many people.

approval

= people judge something positively.

A person can be popular without everyone approving of their behaviour.

approval vs likes

In social media:

like

= one platform reaction/action.

approval

= broader psychological/social meaning behind positive feedback.

A like may signal approval, but not every like means deep approval.

This matters directly in your passage.

approval vs self-worth

approval

= external reaction.

self-worth

= internal sense of one's own value.

The passage argues against building:

> self-worth

primarily on:

> external approval.

approval vs confidence

approval

= others' positive judgement.

confidence

= one's internal belief in ability/value.

External approval can affect confidence, but they are not the same.

approval-seeking vs people-pleasing approval-seeking

= behaviour motivated by desire for positive judgement.

people-pleasing

= repeatedly trying to keep others happy, often at personal cost.

They overlap strongly, but approval-seeking is broader psychologically.

approval rating vs popularity approval rating

= measured proportion expressing approval of performance.

popularity

= broad degree of liking.

Someone may be personally popular while receiving lower approval for a particular decision or performance.

approval in your passage

Your phrase:

> “chasing approval”

does not mean:

- * waiting for management authorization,
- * awaiting regulatory approval,
- * loan approval,
- * client approval.

It means:

> trying repeatedly to obtain positive reactions, praise, likes, acceptance, and validation from other people

The writer contrasts:

> creativity

with:

> external approval-seeking

The point is that creation itself matters more than constantly adjusting your self-worth according to other people’s reactions.

For your original sentence

> “I also learned that creativity matters far more than chasing approval.”

The exact meaning is:

*approval = 作者不應把創作目的變成不停追求陌生人、朋友或社交媒體使用者的 likes、稱讚、認同和正面評價。這裡的 approval 是外界肯定，而不是正式批准。***

Natural translation:

> 「我也明白到，創意遠比不斷追求別人的認同和肯定重要。」
