the broad everyday word for limited length/time.

brief

often slightly more formal and emphasizes that something lasts only a small amount of time or contains only essential information.

> short meeting

> 短會議

> brief meeting

> 簡短而精要的會議

In your passage, both are possible, but brief sounds more polished/formal.

Important distinction 2: brief vs quick

brief

short in duration.

quick

done rapidly.

A meeting can be:

> brief but slow-paced.

So:

brief ≠ necessarily fast.

Important distinction 3: brief vs temporary

brief

lasts a short time.

temporary

is not permanent.

A temporary arrangement could last several years.

A brief arrangement lasts only a short period.

Important distinction 4: brief vs momentary

momentary

extremely short, often only a moment.

brief

short, but could be:

* seconds,

* minutes,

* days,

depending on context.

> momentary hesitation

> 瞬間猶豫

> brief meeting

> 短會議

Important distinction 5: brief vs concise

Very important.

brief

short.

concise

short and efficiently expressed without unnecessary words.

A text can be brief but unclear.

A concise text is both economical and effective.

Important distinction 6: brief vs succinct

succinct

expresses an idea clearly and effectively in few words.

brief

simply short.

> brief answer

> 短答案

> succinct explanation

> 精煉而清楚的解釋

Succinct is more evaluative.

Important distinction 7: brief vs summary

brief adjective:

> brief report

> 簡短報告

summary noun:

- > summary of a report
- > 報告摘要

A brief document is not automatically a summary—it may contain original instructions.

Important distinction 8: brief vs overview

brief

describes length.

overview

describes function: gives the broad picture.

- > brief overview
- > 簡要概覽

Both words contribute different information.

Important distinction 9: brief meeting vs briefing

This is extremely important.

brief meeting

a meeting that does not last long.

briefing

a meeting or communication designed to provide essential information/instructions.

A briefing can be long, and a brief meeting need not be a briefing.

Your passage uses:

- > brief meetings

not necessarily:

> briefings.

Important distinction 10: brief noun vs briefing

brief

often the instructions/specification themselves:

> read the design brief.

briefing

the act/session of communicating those instructions:

> attend a design briefing.

Important distinction 11: brief someone vs tell someone

tell very broad.

brief

give selected relevant information, normally before a task/meeting/decision.

> tell him the news

> 告訴他消息

> brief him on the project

> 向他簡報項目重點

Important distinction 12: brief someone vs update someone

brief

often gives structured background/instructions, especially so someone is prepared.

update

tells them what has changed or happened since the last information.

> brief a new manager on the project

> 向新經理介紹項目背景

> update the manager on today's progress

> 向經理更新今天的進展

Important distinction 13: brief vs inform inform formally give information.

brief

give the essential, task-relevant information, usually in concentrated form.

Briefing often implies preparation for action.

Important distinction 14: brief vs instruct instruct tell someone what to do.

brief

may include:

- * instructions,
- * context,
- * objectives,
- * risks,
- * latest information.

So brief is broader.

Important distinction 15: brief vs explain

explain

make something understandable.

brief

make someone adequately informed/prepared.

A briefing may include explanations, but its goal is often operational readiness.

Important distinction 16: brief vs report

report

give information about findings/events, often after they occur.

brief

often prepare someone beforehand.

This is why brief → debrief is such a useful contrast.

Important distinction 17: brief vs brief someone

Compare:

Adjective:

> a brief meeting

> 簡短會議

Verb:

> brief the team

> 向團隊作簡報

Completely different grammar.

Important distinction 18: brief noun vs brief adjective

Noun:

- > The designer received a brief.
- > 設計師收到一份工作要求。

Adjective:

- > The designer had a brief meeting.
- > 設計師開了一個短會議。

Important distinction 19: project brief vs project summary

project brief

often tells people:

- * what the project is,
- * what must be done,
- * scope,
- * requirements,
- * objectives.

project summary

merely condenses information about the project.

A brief is often directive; a summary is primarily descriptive.

Important distinction 20: design brief vs design specification

design brief

broader:

- * goal,
- * audience,
- * context,
- * constraints.

specification

more exact:

- * measurements,
- * technical requirements,
- * performance criteria.

A specification may form part of a brief.

Important distinction 21: creative brief vs marketing plan

creative brief

guides a particular creative campaign/output.

marketing plan broader strategy covering:

- * market,
- * objectives,
- * budget,
- * channels,
- * timing,
- * measures.

Important distinction 22: briefing vs presentation

briefing

goal = make recipients operationally informed.

presentation

goal = communicate material to an audience; may educate, persuade, entertain, etc.

A briefing can use a presentation, but they are not synonyms.

Important distinction 23: briefing vs meeting

meeting

participants gather to:

- * discuss,
- * decide,
- * coordinate.

briefing

information primarily flows from the briefer to those being briefed.

Modern briefings can still include questions and discussion.

Important distinction 24: press briefing vs press conference

press briefing

often shorter/more information-focused.

press conference

typically a more formal media event, often with substantial questions.

Real-world usage overlaps.

Important distinction 25: legal brief vs general brief

General:

- > design brief
- > 工作要求

Legal:

- > file a brief with the court
- > 提交法律書狀

Do not translate the legal one simply as 「簡報」.

Important distinction 26: case brief vs legal brief

Especially important for law students.

case brief

student/lawyer summary of a decided case.

legal brief

formal advocacy document setting out arguments, especially in AmE.

They are not the same document.

Important distinction 27: brief in UK barrister practice

A barrister's brief traditionally consists of:

- * instructions,
- * relevant papers,
- * case material.

Thus historically:

> briefcase

was a case/bag used to carry such briefs.

Important distinction 28: briefs underwear

This is completely unrelated in modern learner meaning to:

- * legal brief,
- * task brief,
- * short meeting.

Usually plural:

> briefs

and counted as:

> a pair of briefs.

Important distinction 29: brief vs briefs

a brief

instructions/legal document.

briefs

underwear.

Plural alone can radically alter likely interpretation.

Important distinction 30: in brief vs briefly

They often overlap:

- > In brief, communication failed.
- > Briefly, communication failed.

Both = 簡而言之.

But briefly also has the time sense:

- > I spoke to her briefly.
- > 我和她短暫談了一下。

In brief does not normally mean “for a short time”.

Important distinction 31: briefly = two major meanings

Time:

- > She stayed briefly.
- > 她短暫逗留。

Words:

- > She briefly explained it.
- > 她簡要解釋。

Same adverb, two interpretations.

Important distinction 32: briefing note vs meeting notes

briefing note

prepared before/for someone so they understand an issue.

meeting notes

record what happened during a meeting.

Different functions.

Important distinction 33: briefing note vs memo

memo

general internal written communication.

briefing note

specifically designed to prepare someone quickly with:

- * issue,
- * background,
- * key facts,
- * options,
- * recommendation.

Important distinction 34: policy brief vs policy

policy

actual rule/approach.

policy brief

short document analysing an issue or recommending policy action.

Important distinction 35: brief someone vs debrief someone

Core temporal contrast:

brief

before/during:

> give information needed to act.

debrief

after:

> collect information and review what happened.

Important distinction 36: debrief vs feedback

feedback

comments on performance.

debrief

broader review of:

- * events,
- * decisions,
- * outcomes,
- * lessons,
- * problems.

A debrief can include feedback.

Important distinction 37: brief ≠ superficial

A brief explanation is short.

It does not necessarily mean:

- * careless,
- * incomplete,
- * shallow.

A good brief explanation can still contain exactly the necessary information.

Important distinction 38: brief in your passage

Your passage says:

> Brief but regular meetings

The contrast is deliberate:

brief

meetings should not consume too much time.

regular

they should happen consistently.

So the writer is recommending:

> low duration + high consistency

rather than:

> long meetings held occasionally.

That supports the paragraph's wider principle:

more communication is not automatically better; structured and precise communication is better.

Family-extension note

The brief family divides into several important modern branches:

1. short duration

- * brief meeting
- * brief visit
- * brief pause

2. short content

- * brief explanation
- * brief summary
- * brief statement

3. concise discourse

- * be brief
- * keep it brief
- * in brief

4. briefly = short time

- * visit briefly

5. briefly = few words

- * briefly explain

6. task instructions

- * project brief
- * design brief
- * creative brief

7. responsibility/scope

- * within someone's brief
- * outside someone's brief

8. short informational documents

- * policy brief
- * news brief
- * briefing note

9. verb: prepare/inform

- * brief someone on X

10. information session

- * briefing
- * safety briefing
- * press briefing

11. legal document

- * legal brief
- * amicus brief

12. British legal instructions

- * brief for counsel
- * brief a barrister

13. support/advocacy idiom

- * hold no brief for

14. underwear

- * briefs

15. compound

- * briefcase

16. post-event review

- * debrief
- * debriefing

For your passage, the exact branch is:

brief = lasting only a short period of time

For your original sentence

> Brief but regular meetings, written summaries and digital project-management tools can reduce confusion substantially.

Here:

brief = 每次會議只佔用較短時間，集中處理必要的資訊、進度和問題，而不是長時間討論

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 簡短但定期的會議、書面摘要和數碼項目管理工具，都可以大幅減少混亂。

The cleanest contrast is:

> *short = 短，最一般

> brief = 時間 / 內容簡短，常帶「只需重點」的正式語感

> *quick = 做得快、速度快

> *concise = 簡潔而沒有多餘內容

> *summary = 把較長內容濃縮成重點

> *briefing = 向某人交代重點資訊的簡報 / 說明會

And the passage's wording is especially deliberate:

> brief meetings ≠ briefings

The writer means the meetings should be short in duration, while regular enough to stop people from drifting into different directions.
