

Absolutely. I'll redo coach from scratch using the corrected standard we settled on: exhaustive search, conservative splitting, full family sweep, useful compounds/extensions, and no artificial sense inflation. That matches the Golden Manual's requirement to distinguish genuine meanings from contextual variants and family extensions.

The manuals govern the method and structure below; the specific lexical senses of coach are standard modern-English analysis rather than an entry already contained in the uploaded manuals.

Word family: coach / coaches / coached / coaching / coachman / stagecoach / coachwork / coachbuilder

Base word: coach

Plural: coaches

Past tense: coached

Past participle: coached

Related forms: coaching

Useful lexical/family extensions: coachman, stagecoach, coachwork, coachbuilder

Useful compounds: assistant coach, head coach, coaching staff, coach station, coach class, coach house, coaching inn

Part of speech: noun / verb

Your sentence

> "I am writing to apply for the position of Assistant Coach at the Hong Kong Sports Foundation."

Meaning in this passage

Here, coach means a person who systematically trains, guides, and develops athletes so that they can improve their skills and performance.

繁體中文：

負責訓練、指導及協助運動員提升技術、能力和比賽表現的人

中文翻譯：

> 「本人現致函申請香港體育基金會的助理教練職位。」

Assistant Coach = 協助主要教練訓練、指導和支援運動員的助理教練

1. coach — person who trains or guides someone — 教練；指導者

The broad modern human sense of coach is a person who helps another person or group improve a skill, ability, or performance through instruction, practice, feedback, and guidance.

This broad sense covers sport as well as several non-sporting contexts.

A. sports coach — 體育教練

Practice 1 — Original

> “I am writing to apply for the position of Assistant Coach.”

「本人現致函申請助理*教練*職位。」

Practice 2

> “The coach adjusted the runners’ training programme before the championship.”

「*教練*在錦標賽前調整了跑手的訓練計劃。」

Practice 3

> “A good coach knows when an athlete needs harder training and when recovery is more important.”

「優秀的*教練*懂得判斷運動員何時需要加強訓練，以及何時恢復更為重要。」

sports coach = 負責訓練和指導運動員或球隊，以改善技巧、體能、策略及表現的人

B. professional / personal coach — 專業指導者；教練式顧問

The same underlying concept extends beyond sport.

Common examples:

career coach

職涯教練 / 職業發展顧問

executive coach

行政人員教練 / 高階管理指導顧問

life coach

人生教練

voice coach

聲線 / 發聲教練

acting coach

表演教練

Practice 4

> “She hired a career coach before applying for senior management roles.”

「她在申請高級管理職位前聘請了一位職涯*教練 / 顧問*。」

Practice 5

> “The actor worked with a voice coach to improve his delivery.”

「那名演員跟一位聲線*教練*合作，以改善說話和表達技巧。」 coach = 透過持續指導、練習和回饋，幫助某人改善特定能力或表現的人

Curation note

I would not treat “sports coach,” “career coach,” “voice coach,” and “executive coach” as four separate lexical meanings.

The underlying concept remains:

a person who actively guides someone toward better performance

This follows the Golden Manual rule that different contexts do not automatically equal different meanings.

2. coach — long-distance or touring bus — 長途巴士；旅遊巴士

Especially in British English, a coach is a large passenger vehicle commonly used for long-distance journeys, tours, organised groups, or intercity travel.

Practice 6

> “The athletes travelled to the competition by coach.”

「運動員乘坐*長途巴士 / 旅遊巴士*前往比賽場地。」

Practice 7

> “Our coach leaves for Manchester at seven tomorrow morning.”

「我們前往曼徹斯特的長途巴士明早七時開出。」 coach = 主要用於長途、旅遊、團體或城市之間客運的大型巴士

Important distinction

bus normally covers buses generally.

In British English:

bus

often suggests ordinary local public transport

coach

often suggests longer-distance or touring transport

3. coach — railway passenger carriage — 火車客車車廂

Coach can also mean one of the passenger-carrying sections of a train.

Practice 8

> “Our seats are in the third coach.”

「我們的座位在第三節*客車車廂*。」

Practice 9

> “Passengers in the front coach were asked to move farther down the train.”

「前面一節*車廂*的乘客被要求往列車後方移動。」 coach = 火車中供乘客乘坐的一節客車車廂

Register note

Usage varies by region.

British English commonly uses carriage as well.

American English commonly uses car.

4. coach — economy / standard class of travel — 經濟艙；普通艙

Especially in American English, coach can refer to the standard, lower-priced passenger class on an aircraft and historically on some forms of passenger transport.

Practice 10

> “I normally fly coach on short trips.”

「短途旅行時，我通常乘坐經濟艙。」

Practice 11

> “The company booked all employees in coach.”

「公司為所有員工預訂了經濟艙。」

coach = 航空旅程中相對於商務艙或頭等艙的普通 / 經濟等級

Useful compound: coach class

coach class = 經濟艙 / 普通艙

> “They bought three coach-class tickets.”

「他們購買了三張經濟艙機票。」

This is part of the same travel-class sense, not a new one.

5. coach — horse-drawn passenger carriage — 大型馬車；四輪馬車

A coach is also a large enclosed carriage traditionally pulled by horses.

This sense is historical in origin but remains readily encountered in ceremonial, historical, museum, tourism, and literary contexts.

Practice 12

> “The royal couple arrived in a horse-drawn coach.”

「皇室夫婦乘坐一輛馬拉四輪馬車抵達。」

Practice 13

> “The museum contains several nineteenth-century coaches.”

「博物館收藏了數輛十九世紀的大型馬車。」 coach = 傳統上由馬匹拉動、用來載人的大型封閉式馬車

This transport meaning is historically important because several later uses of coach developed from it.

6. coach + person/team — train and guide — 訓練；指導

As a verb, coach means to train or guide someone so that they improve their performance.

Again, sport and non-sport uses belong to the same broad semantic concept.

A. sport

Practice 14

> “She coaches young middle-distance runners.”

「她訓練 / 指導年輕的中距離跑手。」

Practice 15

> “He has coached athletes at international level for ten years.”

「他已經有十年指導國際級運動員的經驗。」

coach someone/team = 透過有系統的訓練、建議及回饋提升運動表現

B. work / communication / personal performance

Practice 16

> “The manager coached the new employee on presentation skills.”

「經理就簡報技巧指導那名新員工。」

Practice 17

> “She was coached before appearing on television.”

「她在上電視前接受了專門的指導 / 訓練。」

coach someone = 透過練習、建議及回饋，協助某人改善某項技能或表現

7. coach someone for/on/in + specific task or skill — 針對.....提供指導

This is an important grammatical branch of the verb.

coach someone for + event/exam/interview

To prepare someone specifically for a particular event or performance.

Practice 18

> “She coached him for the job interview.”

「她針對求職面試為他提供了*指導和準備*。」

Practice 19

> “The students were coached for the entrance examination.”

「學生接受了針對入學考試的*專門輔導*。」

coach someone for something = 為某項考試、面試、表演或活動進行針對性的準備和指導

coach someone on + topic/skill

> “The senior manager coached her on negotiation techniques.”

「高級經理就談判技巧對她進行了*指導*。」

coach someone on something = 就某項技能或主題向某人提供具體訓練和回饋

coach someone in + activity/skill

> “He was coached in public speaking.”

「他接受過公開演講方面的*訓練*。」

coach someone in something = 在某項活動或能力方面訓練某人

Curation note

These patterns are worth teaching, but they are grammatical constructions of the coaching sense, not three separate lexical meanings.

Family-extension note

The Golden Manual says family extensions should be actively searched but clearly labelled so that they are not mistaken for separate meanings of the base word.

coaching

A. sports coaching

The work or process of training athletes.

> “She has several years of athletics coaching experience.”

「她擁有數年的田徑*教練工作 / 訓練指導經驗*。」 sports coaching = 對運動員或球隊進行持續訓練和指導的工作

B. professional/personal coaching

> “Executive coaching can help managers develop leadership skills.”

「行政人員*教練式指導*可以幫助管理人員培養領導能力。」 coaching = 透過持續指導、練習、提問及回饋來改善某人的能力或表現

These remain applications of the same broad “guidance toward improved performance” concept.

Useful compounds

assistant coach

A coach who helps the principal or head coach.

assistant coach = 助理教練

This is the compound appearing in your passage.

head coach

The coach with primary responsibility for a team or training programme.

head coach = 總教練 / 主教練

> “The head coach selected the final team.”

「主教練選出了最後的參賽隊伍。」

coaching staff

The group of coaches responsible for a team or athletes.

coaching staff = 教練團隊 / 教練組

> “The medical team met with the coaching staff.”

「醫療團隊與教練組會面。」

Very useful for your sports context.

coach station

Especially British English:

coach station = 長途巴士總站

> “The hotel is opposite the central coach station.”

「酒店位於中央長途巴士總站對面。」

This is a transparent compound but common enough to be useful.

coach class

Especially American English:

coach class = 經濟艙 / 普通艙

Already covered under the travel-class sense.

Broader lexical-family extensions

stagecoach

A horse-drawn passenger vehicle that historically travelled along regular routes between towns and stopping places.

stagecoach = 驛馬車；昔日沿固定路線載客的公共馬車

Practice

> “Travellers once crossed the region by stagecoach.”

「旅客昔日乘坐*驛馬車*穿越這個地區。」

This is a separate lexical item containing coach, not another meaning of bare coach.

coachman

A man who drives a horse-drawn coach.

coachman = 馬車夫

Practice

> “The coachman brought the carriage to the entrance.”

「*馬車夫*把馬車駛到入口。」

Register note

This is strongly associated with historical or traditional contexts.

coach house

Originally, a building where a horse-drawn coach was stored, often with space for related equipment or horses.

Modern property language may also use coach house for a converted former coach building or a dwelling of that architectural type.

coach house = 馬車房；舊馬車房建築；由馬車房改建的住宅

Practice

> “The old coach house has been converted into a small home.”

「那座舊馬車房已改建成一所小住宅。」 coaching inn

Historically, an inn where stagecoaches stopped for passengers, food, rest, and often a change of horses.

coaching inn = 驛站旅館；馬車驛站

Practice

> “The building was once a busy coaching inn.”

「這座建築昔日是一間繁忙的驛站旅館。」

This is historical but still useful in British history, tourism, and architecture contexts.

coachwork

The body of a motor vehicle, especially considered in terms of its construction or design.

Historically the term developed from the craft of building coaches.

coachwork = 車身；車身結構 / 製造工藝

Practice

> “The vintage car is admired for its elegant coachwork.”

「這輛古董車因其優雅的車身設計和工藝而受到欣賞。」

This is a useful but more specialised automotive family extension.

coachbuilder

A person or company that constructs vehicle bodies, historically horse-drawn coaches and later automobile bodies.

coachbuilder = 車身製造商 / 車身製造工匠

Practice

> “The body was produced by a specialist coachbuilder.”

「車身由一家專門的車身製造商製造。」

This is more specialised than the core vocabulary, so it belongs in the family-extension section rather than the central sense list.

Historical / lower-priority uses

These exist, but under the Golden Manual I would not promote them to the main modern-learning map.

coach — verb meaning travel by coach

Historically:

> “They coached across the country.”

= travelled by horse-drawn coach

This is now uncommon.

coaching — travelling by horse-drawn coach

Likewise historical.

These can be recognized if encountered in older texts, but they are not important enough for the main modern learner entry.

Important distinctions

coach vs trainer

These overlap considerably.

coach often emphasizes:

- * broader development
- * technique
- * strategy
- * performance
- * feedback
- * competition preparation

trainer often emphasizes:

- * physical conditioning
- * exercise
- * drills
- * practical skill instruction

However, actual job titles vary greatly between sports and organisations, so this is a tendency rather than an absolute rule.

coach vs teacher

teacher

usually focuses on education, knowledge, and structured instruction.

coach

usually focuses more strongly on improving someone's performance through practice, observation, feedback, and individualized guidance.

There is considerable overlap.

coach vs mentor

coach

typically works actively on performance or skill development.

mentor

typically provides broader advice, perspective, and guidance based on experience.

A mentor may discuss an entire career; a coach may focus intensively on how someone performs a particular task.

coach vs tutor

tutor

usually teaches an academic subject or gives individual academic instruction.

coach

can prepare someone for an exam or performance, but tends to emphasize targeted improvement and preparation rather than ordinary subject teaching.

coach vs bus

In British English:

bus

= general term, especially common for local scheduled transport

coach

= large passenger vehicle especially associated with long-distance, touring, or organised group travel coach vs carriage vs car — railway use

coach

= passenger section of a train

carriage

= very common British term

car

= very common American term

They overlap, but regional usage differs.
