

Absolutely — fame is a strong polysemy/family target because your passage contrasts the excitement of becoming briefly “famous” with the more lasting value of self-knowledge.

Your passage uses it here:

> “sudden online fame is not only exciting but also unexpectedly exhausting...”

and later:

> “not because it made me ‘famous’ for a day...”

Here fame means the state of being widely known and recognised by many people, especially because of public or online attention.

Word family: fame / famous / famously / infamous / infamy

Base noun: fame

Adjective: famous

Adverb: famously

Opposite-valence adjective: infamous

Related noun: infamy

Part of speech: noun (名詞) / adjective (形容詞) / adverb (副詞)

Major domains:

* public recognition

* entertainment/media

* internet/social media

* reputation and renown

* historical fame

* reputation for a particular quality

* idioms such as claim to fame, rise to fame, hall of fame, fifteen minutes of fame

* contrast with infamous / infamy

Meaning in your passage: fame = widespread public recognition — 名氣；知名度；成名狀態

Your phrase:

> “sudden online fame”

means:

> the state of suddenly becoming known and recognised by a large number of people online.

繁體中文：

突然在網絡上被大量人認識、注意和談論的狀態；網絡名氣 / 爆紅後的知名度

Natural translation:

> “sudden online fame is not only exciting but also unexpectedly exhausting”

「突然在網上*成名 / 爆紅*，不只是令人興奮，也會出乎意料地令人疲憊。」

So here:

> fame = 被大量公眾認識的狀態，而不是單純被少數人讚賞

A. GENERAL PUBLIC FAME

「兩名學生相處得非常融洽。」

Practice 110

> “Despite their differences, they got on famously.”

「儘管彼此有分歧，他們仍然相處得非常好。」

Here famously means:

> splendidly / extremely well not “in a famous way”.

Especially BrE, somewhat old-fashioned.

AU. INFAMOUS

56. infamous = famous for something bad — 臭名昭著的；聲名狼藉的

A crucial family contrast.

Practice 111

> “The prison became infamous for its harsh conditions.”

「這所監獄因環境惡劣而臭名昭著。」

Practice 112

> “The incident became infamous.”

「這宗事件變得惡名昭彰。」 infamous = 因壞事、醜聞、殘酷或負面特質而廣為人知

AV. INFAMOUS FOR

57. infamous for + bad quality/action = 因壞事而臭名昭著

「這件事因其惡劣性質而留下了惡名。」

Practice 116

> “His actions brought him infamy rather than honour.”

「他的行為帶給他的不是榮譽，而是惡名。」 infamy = 因極壞行為而被廣泛記住的惡名

AX. FAME VS INFAMY

fame

= being widely known; neutral or often positive.

infamy

= being widely known specifically for something bad.

> fame

> = 名聲 / 名氣

> infamy

> = 惡名 / 臭名

A person can have fame without respect, but infamy explicitly encodes negative reputation.

AY. FAMOUS VS INFAMOUS

famous

= widely known.

infamous

= widely known for bad reasons.

> famous restaurant

> = 著名餐廳 > infamous fraud case

> = 臭名昭著的詐騙案

Do not use infamous merely to mean “very famous”.

AZ. FAME VS CELEBRITY

You just curated celebrity.

fame

= state/condition of being widely known.

celebrity

= usually the famous person themselves; can also more formally mean celebrity status.

> “She achieved fame.”

> = 她成名了。

> “She became a celebrity.”

> = 她成為名人。

This is the most important distinction.

BA. FAME VS FAMOUS

fame

noun:

> “Fame changed him.”

= 名氣改變了他。

famous

adjective:

> “He became famous.”

= 他成名了。

Do not say:

> He became fame. ❌

BB. FAME VS POPULARITY

You curated popularity conceptually in the passage context.

fame

= many people know who you are.

popularity

= many people like/support you.

A person can have:

> great fame but low popularity.

So:

> fame = 知名

> popularity = 受歡迎

BC. FAME VS REPUTATION

fame

= degree of being widely known.

reputation

= what people generally believe about your character/quality.

A person may have:

- * fame

- * a good reputation

- * a bad reputation

These are separate dimensions.

BD. FAME VS RENOWN

renown

= widespread fame based especially on admired achievements.

fame

= broader and more neutral.

> renowned scientist

> = 享負盛名的科學家 > famous internet personality

> = 著名網絡人物

Renown sounds more prestigious/formal.

BE. FAME VS PRESTIGE

fame

= being known.

prestige

= being respected/high-status.

A viral creator may have:

> fame

without:

> prestige.

Very relevant to your passage.

BF. FAME VS RECOGNITION

recognition

= being noticed, identified, or acknowledged.

fame

= recognition on a much broader public scale.

A student may receive:

> recognition at school

without achieving:

> fame.

BG. FAME VS VISIBILITY

You already curated visibility.

visibility

= degree to which someone is seen/noticed.

fame

= established public recognition.

Visibility may produce fame, but not necessarily.

BH. FAME VS PUBLICITY

publicity

= public/media attention.

fame

= state of being widely known.

A scandal can generate:

> publicity

which may increase:

> fame or infamy.

BI. FAME VS ATTENTION

attention

= people are focusing on you now.

fame

= people know who you are.

A viral post may attract huge attention before the creator develops real fame.

BJ. FAME VS VIRALITY

You already curated viral.

virality

= content spreads rapidly.

fame

= person becomes widely known.

A post can go viral without creating lasting fame.

This is one of the central themes of your passage.

BK. FAME VS SUCCESS

success

= achievement of a desired result.

fame

= being widely known.

Someone can:

- * succeed without becoming famous
- * become famous without meaningful achievement

The passage explicitly questions treating visibility/fame as success.

BL. FAME VS ACHIEVEMENT

achievement

= something accomplished.

fame

= public recognition.

Achievement may lead to fame, but fame itself is not the achievement.

BM. FAME VS STATUS

status

= social/professional rank or position.

fame

= public recognition.

A person may have high institutional status but little public fame.

BN. FAME VS INFLUENCE

influence

= ability to affect others.

fame

= being known.

A famous person may have influence, but not automatically.

BO. FAME VS AUTHORITY / EXPERTISE

fame

= public recognition.

= knowledge/skill.

authority

= recognised expertise or legitimate power.

Fame does not automatically create expertise.

BP. FAME VS NOTORIETY

notoriety

= widespread recognition, usually for negative reasons.

fame

= broader/neutral.

Notoriety is much closer to:

> infamy

than ordinary fame.

BQ. FAMOUS VS WELL-KNOWN

famous

= widely known, often on a large scale.

well-known

= known by many people, but sometimes less grand/intense.

Compare:

> a famous actor

> = 著名演員

> a well-known local teacher

> = 當地頗有名的老師

Famous often suggests greater prominence.

BR. FAMOUS VS CELEBRATED

famous

= widely known.

celebrated

= widely known and highly admired for achievement.

A person can be famous for scandal but would not normally be called celebrated for it.

BS. FAMOUS VS PROMINENT prominent = important, noticeable, or influential within a field.

famous

= widely known to the public.

A prominent scientist may not be famous outside science.

BT. FAMOUS VS ICONIC

iconic

= highly symbolic, instantly recognisable, culturally representative.

famous

= widely known.

Something can be famous without being iconic.

BU. FAMOUS FOR VS FAMOUS AS

Critical grammar distinction:

famous for + reason/quality

> “She is famous for her videos.”

= 她因影片而聞名。 famous as + identity/role

> “She is famous as a comedian.”

= 她以喜劇演員身份聞名。

Excellent MCQ material.

BV. FAMOUS TO VS FAMOUS AMONG

Less central but useful.

famous among + group

= 在某群體中出名

> “The café is famous among students.”

「這間咖啡店在學生之間很有名。」 famous to less common; often:

> known to somebody

Natural English often prefers:

> known to rather than:

> famous to.

BW. “FAMOUS LAST WORDS”

59. famous last words = 說得太早了；看吧，這話很快就被打臉

A major humorous idiom.

Practice 117

> “Nothing can go wrong.”

> “Famous last words.”

「不可能出問題。」

「這話可別說得太早。」

Practice 118

> “I said the video would get only ten likes — famous last words.”

「我還說影片最多只有十個讚——結果很快就被打臉了。」 famous last words = 用來挖苦某個過分自信的預測，暗示事情往往會相反發展

Very relevant to the passage's opening expectation.

BX. “FAMOUS FOR BEING FAMOUS”

CC. "FAME PRECEDES SOMEONE"

64. your fame precedes you = 久仰大名；你的名聲早已傳來

A fixed formal/humorous expression.

Practice 127

> "I've heard so much about your work — your fame precedes you."

「我早已聽過很多關於你的事——真是久仰大名。」

Practice 128

> "Your fame precedes you around here."

「你在這裡可是早已有名。」

Can be sincere or ironic.

CD. “NO CLAIM TO FAME”

65. have no particular claim to fame = 沒有甚麼特別出名之處

Practice 129

> “The village has no particular claim to fame.”

「這條村沒有甚麼特別出名的地方。」

Practice 130

> “Before the viral post, he had no claim to fame.”

「爆紅貼文出現之前，他沒有甚麼特別出名的事蹟。」

CE. “FAME MACHINE”

66. fame machine = 製造名人的媒體 / 宣傳機制

A figurative media term.

Practice 131

CG. “FAME-DRIVEN”

68. fame-driven = 受名氣驅動的；以成名為主要動機的

Practice 135

> “The article criticised fame-driven behaviour.”

「文章批評了以追求名氣為主要動機的行為。」

Practice 136

> “Fame-driven choices may not bring lasting satisfaction.”

「由成名欲驅動的選擇未必帶來長久滿足。」

CH. FAME IN YOUR PASSAGE

The passage uses:

> “sudden online fame”

and later:

> “not because it made me ‘famous’ for a day...”

The quotation marks around “famous” matter.

They suggest the writer is treating this as:

> brief, limited, internet-generated fame rather than serious long-term celebrity status.

The passage's model is:

> viral post

> → visibility

> → temporary fame

> → attention

> → dependence/pressure

> → attention fades

So fame here is deliberately shown as:

* exciting

* temporary

* unstable

* externally controlled rather than a stable source of self-worth.

For your original passage

> “After experiencing it myself, though, I have realised that sudden online fame is not only exciting but also unexpectedly exhausting, unsettling and deeply instructive.”

The exact meaning is:

fame = 作者的影片爆紅後，突然被大量原本不認識自己的人看到、認識、留言和談論，因此短時間內取得了很高的網絡知名度。

Natural translation:

> 「不過，親身經歷過後，我才明白，突然在網上成名不只是令人興奮，也會出乎意料地令人疲憊、不安，而且令人學到很多。」

Later:

> “not because it made me ‘famous’ for a day...”

The quotation marks suggest:

> 作者知道這只是很短暫、有限度的網絡名氣，不是真正穩定或長期的名人地位。

Natural translation:

> 「不是因為它令我『成名』了一天……」
