X is no guarantee of Y = X 並不能確保 Y 一定成立 / 發生

Important distinction: guarantee vs promise

promise

= one person/organisation says they will do something.

guarantee

= stronger assurance that a result, quality, right, or obligation will be secured.

> “I promise to help.”

= 我答應幫忙。

> “We guarantee a full refund.”

= 我們保證全額退款。

Guarantee often sounds more formal and stronger.

Important distinction: guarantee vs ensure

guarantee

= make certain, often with an explicit assurance.

ensure

= take steps so that something happens.

> “We guarantee freshness.”

= 我們保證新鮮。

> “We check every batch to ensure freshness.”

= 我們檢查每批產品以確保新鮮。

So:

* guarantee = 保證結果

* ensure = 採取措施確保結果

Important distinction: guarantee vs assure assure

usually takes a person:

> “I assure you that it is safe.”

「我向你保證它是安全的。」

often takes a result/product/right:

> “We guarantee its quality.”

「我們保證它的品質。」

They overlap, but grammar differs.

Important distinction: guarantee vs warranty

guarantee

broader:

formal assurance of quality, result, obligation, or refund.

warranty

more specifically:

formal written promise about repair/replacement for a product.

In everyday product English:

* BrE often uses guarantee

* AmE often prefers warranty

But there is overlap.

Important distinction: guarantee vs insurance

guarantee

= assures outcome/obligation.

insurance

= provides financial compensation if a specified loss occurs.

A guarantee is not insurance.

Important distinction: guarantee vs certainty

certainty

= state of being sure.

guarantee

= something that makes or formally promises certainty.

> “There is no certainty of success.”

= 沒有成功的確定性。

> “There is no guarantee of success.”

= 沒有成功保證。

Very close, but guarantee often implies assurance/condition.

Important distinction: guaranteed vs likely

likely

= certain/assured.

> likely to succeed

> = 很可能成功

> guaranteed to succeed

> = 保證成功 / 一定成功

Very different degree of certainty.

Important distinction: guaranteed vs inevitable

guaranteed

= assured, often because of a promise/condition.

inevitable

= cannot be avoided because of circumstances.

> success is guaranteed

> = 成功有保證

> change is inevitable

> = 改變無可避免

Not the same.

Important distinction: guarantee — product vs financial

Product:

> “two-year guarantee”

= 兩年保養 / 保證

Finance:

> “loan guarantee”

= 貸款擔保

Same noun, completely different legal/economic function.

Excellent MCQ contrast.

Important distinction: guarantee — result vs guarantee — collateral-like responsibility

Result:

> “Nothing guarantees success.”

= 沒有事情能保證成功。

Financial:

> “He guaranteed the loan.”

= 他為貸款作擔保。

Different underlying mechanism.

Important distinction: guarantee of success vs guarantee that...

Noun:

> “There is no guarantee of success.”

Verb:

> “Nothing guarantees that you will succeed.”

Same core idea, different grammar.

Important distinction: guarantee someone something vs guarantee something

guarantee someone something

= ensure a person receives it

> “The contract guarantees workers paid leave.”

guarantee something

= assure the thing/result itself

> “The company guarantees quality.”

Family-extension sweep

After the full audit, the useful modern family includes:

* guarantee — verb: assure result = 保證 / 確保
 * be guaranteed = 有保證的 / 確定的
 * guarantee + noun = 確保某結果 / 權利
