CA. PASSAGE RECAP

> “The student playing the victim had to explain why silence could hurt as much as direct insults.”

Here:

hurt = cause emotional pain or psychological distress

Best Traditional Chinese:

* 傷害

* 傷害感情

* 令人難受

* contextually: 造成心理上的傷害

Natural contextual translation:

*扮演受害者的學生必須解釋，為甚麼沉默所造成的傷害可以和直接侮辱一樣深。 ****

Passage MCQ-ready meaning

hurt

= to cause emotional pain, sadness, humiliation, rejection, or distress

傷害感情；令人難受；造成心理傷害

The single most important learner contrast is:

> *I hurt my knee. ****

> → 我*弄傷了膝蓋*。

but:

> *My knee hurts. ****

> → 我的膝蓋*很痛*。

and:

> *You hurt my feelings. ****

> → 你*傷害了我的感情*。

Then the word expands beyond literal pain:

> hurt the company's reputation

> → 損害公司聲譽

> hurt sales

> → 打擊銷售

> hurt your chances

> → 降低你的機會

> hurt performance

> → 影響表現

A very useful semantic shortcut is:

HURT = pain or damage

That pain/damage may be:

1. physical sensation
2. physical injury
3. emotional pain
4. damage to something abstract
5. practical disadvantage

So the passage uses the emotional-harm branch: silence itself can function as a socially meaningful action and can cause a victim genuine psychological pain even when nobody says anything directly insulting.
