Important distinction 1: mood vs emotion

emotion

usually a specific feeling:

* anger

* fear

* joy

* sadness

mood

usually a broader emotional state that can last longer and may not have one obvious cause.

> Anger is an emotion.

憤怒是一種情緒。

> I've been in a bad mood all morning.

我整個早上心情都不好。

So mood is more like your overall emotional climate.

Important distinction 2: mood vs feeling

feeling

very broad and can refer to a specific emotion, physical sensation, or opinion.

specifically an overall temporary emotional state.

> I have a strange feeling in my leg.

我的腿有奇怪的感覺。

You cannot replace feeling there with mood.

Important distinction 3: mood vs atmosphere

mood

can describe one person's internal state or a group's/place's emotional tone.

atmosphere

usually describes the feeling of a place or situation.

> I'm in a good mood.

我心情很好。

> The restaurant has a relaxed atmosphere.

餐廳氣氛很輕鬆。

Important distinction 4: in a good mood vs happy

happy

directly describes happiness.

in a good mood

describes a generally positive emotional state.

Someone in a good mood may be:

- * cheerful
- * relaxed
- * friendly
- * optimistic

without necessarily feeling intense happiness.

Important distinction 5: in the mood vs in a mood

Very important.

in the mood for/to...

= 有心情 / 想做

> I'm in the mood for coffee.

我想喝咖啡。

in a mood

can mean visibly emotional, irritable, or difficult, especially in BrE.

> He's in a mood today.

他今天*情緒不好 / 脾氣有點差*。

Very different.

Important distinction 6: moody vs sad

sad

specifically unhappy.

moody

can mean:

- * emotions change often

- * currently sullen/irritable

A moody person is not necessarily sad all the time.

Important distinction 7: moody vs emotional

emotional

strongly affected by emotion.

moody

emotions fluctuate or the person appears sullen.

So:

> emotional ≠ moody

Important distinction 8: mood swings vs changing your mind

Mood swings concern changes in emotion.

Changing your mind concerns changes in opinion or decision.

They are not the same.

Important distinction 9: set the mood vs be in the mood

set the mood

create an atmosphere:

> Candles set the mood.

蠟燭營造氣氛。

be in the mood

person feels willing:

> I'm in the mood to relax.

我想放鬆一下。

Important distinction 10: mood vs temperament

mood

temporary.

temperament

more stable personality tendency.

> He's in a bad mood today.

他今天心情不好。

> He has a calm temperament.

他天性沉着。

This distinction is very useful.

Important distinction 11: mood vs personality

Your mood can change within hours.

Your personality is a much more stable pattern of traits.

So Leo's:

* kindness / curiosity → personality traits

* better mood → temporary emotional state

Important distinction 12: better mood vs better feeling

In your passage:

> leave in a better mood

is very natural because it means the speaker's overall emotional state has improved.

> leave with a better feeling would mean something slightly different—perhaps a more positive impression or sensation.

Family-extension note

Mood has two closely related modern branches:

1. personal emotional state

* good mood

* bad mood

* better mood

* in the mood

2. emotional atmosphere

* mood of the room

* set the mood

* moody lighting/music

The common core is:

an overall emotional tone

The related adjective moody develops in two directions:

- * a person whose mood changes easily
- * an artistic atmosphere that feels dark, emotional, or dramatic

These are connected, but the aesthetic use should still be labeled clearly for learners.

For your original sentence

> Whenever I spend time with him, I always leave in a better mood.

Here:

mood = 心情；整體情緒狀態

and:

in a better mood = 心情比之前更好、更輕鬆、更愉快

The meaning is not that Leo changes the speaker's personality. It is much more immediate:

before spending time with Leo

→ ordinary adult stress/routine

after spending time with Leo

→ emotionally lighter and happier

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 每次和他相處之後，我離開時*心情總會比之前更好*。

So the key passage sense is the straightforward temporary emotional-state meaning of mood.
